VOLUME XV ALL STATE EDITION

Foreword and Preface

It has been the aim of the publishers of the 1923 WYO to make the book more than a mere record of the college year, to show that inseparable relation the University bears to the State of which the University is a part and which makes possible the University.

Many things have been included which do not ordinarily form a part of a college annual; The history of the State and of the University has been touched to give the setting of the college year—to remind the present generation of the work of the pioneers of the State and of the University. Views from various parts of the State showing Wyoming's wonderful scenery and her varied activities and industries have been included.

The WYO does not pretend to be a comprehensive record of the fields touched but at best a hotch potch which though not a complete history will serve, we hope, as a pleasant reminder of days spent in the University and elsewhere in the State.

The assembling of all this material has been an enormous task and so many have contributed that it is impossible to enumerate them. We do wish to express our thanks to the State Department of Immigration and the State Historical Society for the use of engravings, and to the various railroads, who have supplied engravings, to Dr. Grace Raymond Hebard for assistance in assembling and identifying old pictures used in the history section and for valuable suggestions, to Miss Colegrove for the assistance of her department in handling correspondence, to Miss Amy Gardner and her department for art work and many helpful suggestions, and to the various contributors. It is desired to give special credit to the managing editor, who has been most loyal and diligent—and to the many members of the staff; and finally to all the hundreds of students and faculty, who have supplied pictures and material.

Now that the job is done we see where we have made many mistakes and we hope that our successors may profit by our experience and that next year and each succeeding year the WYO will be better.

The Governors and the University

Born to and of the State, the law that ushered the University into life, tied up to it the Governor's official interest. He became its "god-father" for the period of his term of office. He must accept responsibility to the extent of naming its guardians, the Board of Trustees. This responsibility demanded knowledge of the University's aims and its needs, and this in turn creates personal interest in it. In the beginning this relationship was scarcely more than the perfunctory duty prescribed by law. It has become the intimate hopefulness of a parent for a promising child. Other institutions are maintained in order to secure safety and justice today; the University as an assurance of an enlarged and glorified tomorrow.

*It is of interest that the University's first President was a former Governor. Hon. John W. Hoyt had served the territory as chief executive from 1878 to 1882. He was a man of great personal dignity, rare scholarship and highest idealism. His academic vision far outran the institution's resources but his hopes and plans for the University, as outlined in the first "Circular of Information, 1887" have been a standing challenge to his successors.

The University opened its doors in territorial days, September 6, 1887, Thomas Moonlight being the Governor. He was succeeded in 1889 by Francis E. Warren, who has the distinction of being the last territorial Governor and the first under the new State Constitution. Warren's election to the United States Senate followed soon, severing his official relationship to the University; but throughout the long period in which he has been an outstanding figure in our national life he has been its consistent friend. Then came several State administrations that for one reason or another were relatively short. During these the University enjoyed the confidence of Amos W. Barber, John E. Osborne, William A. Richards, De Forest Richards, and Fennimore Chatterton, whose combined terms of office covered the years from November, 1890, to January, 1905.

With the inauguration of Governor B. B. Brooks in January, 1905, the contact became more than merely official friendliness. It developed into that type of support which comes from faith in the ideals of, and that hope for a college or University that we often see in the greater alumni of long established institutions. This date marks the time when the University began to find its way into the hearts of the people, not merely into their intellectual consciousness. Merely to enumerate the services rendered by the following families shows how abiding the interest and how unselfish their labors for the institution.

The administration of Governor Brooks covered six years and during that time he showed in many ways his constructive support. The next administration, that of Hon. Joseph M. Carey, began in January, 1911. Among other notable appointments made by him to the Board of Trustees was that of Mrs. B. B. Brooks, who has served continuously and with distinction since 1914, having been reappointed by Governor Robert D. Carey in 1919. Mrs. Brooks' sound judgment has been of incalculable value in the business affairs of the institution, but better yet her interest in the students themselves has expressed itself through the substantial financial aid of loan and scholarship funds administered by her. It may therefore justly be said that since 1905 the Brooks family (for son and daughters have been honored students in the University) has been a tower of strength to the institution.

The history of another family is tied up with that of the University almost as notably as it is with the history of the State. Hon. Joseph M. Carey has been the institution's life-long friend. From that day in 1887 when he assisted in dedicating the infant college to the service of Wyoming he has continued to love it. Perhaps no year passed in which he did not serve it by visit or address. In 1911 he became Governor and for four years the University's official sponsor. In 1915, his successor in the Governorship, Hon. John B. Kendrick, appointed him a member of the Board of Trustees. In this position he served with fidelity for six years. In 1919, his son, Robert D. Carey, became Governor.

The quadrennium from 1915 to 1919 covers the administrations of Governor John B. Kendrick and Acting-Governor Frank L. Houx. Governor Kendrick's interest in the University was immediate and has not ceased to this day. Though elected United States Senator after serving as Governor only two years, yet in national legislation affecting the University he has not forgotten the institution that he has learned to cherish and at which he is always a welcome visitor.

The administration of Robert D. Carey is unique in that he immediately gave personal consideration to any plans that looked forward to an enlarged academic life upon this campus. The Legislature of 1919 took advanced ground in making the Governor an ex officio member of the Board of Trustees. Certainly Governor Carey justified their action by the fine way in which he gave of his time and shared with the Board his best constructive thought. For a third of a century the University has been indebted to the friendly services of the Carey family.

Those to whom the progress of the University seems of vital importance were particularly happy in the last campaign. Both of the candidates had given hostages. That members of their families were in the student body was concrete evidence of their confidence in the University. Governor W. B. Ross will doubtless come to love the institution in the ratio in which he is permitted to serve its interests. No one appreciates enough the spirit of service of State officials and members of boards whose only compensation is the satisfaction that comes from the consciousness that they have honestly tried to be of service to their fellow-men of today by promoting those interests whose full fruitage comes in the generations of the tomorrows.

Owen Nelson.

ROBERT D. CAREY

Governor of the State of Wyoming and Ex-Officio Member of the Board of Trustees during part of the college year 1922-23

The University and the State

OTH as Governor and as an ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees of the University of Wyoming I have taken a great interest in the University.

It has been a pleasure to have seen the University make the progress that it has during the past four years which I believe to be the greatest in its history. More than anything else the University has needed students and it is most gratifying that the people of Wyoming have realized at last that they have a great University where the boys and girls of this State can obtain the very best of an education.

From now on the University should grow with the growth of the State and as I look forward to a rapid industrial and agricultural development of Wyoming I feel certain that the University will grow proportionately.

I am glad that the institution has been so well financed and that so many new buildings have been provided for, which are necessary to take care of the increase in students.

While a new President has been elected recently, no one should overlook or forget the many things that were accomplished during the time that Professor Aven Nelson was President. His successor, Dr. Crane, has all the qualifications of making an ideal head for the University and I am convinced, if he is given an opportunity, that his efforts will be successful.

Although my official relations with the University are over, I am still interested in the institution and its students and I am looking forward to the time when the students shall be numbered by the thousands rather than by the hundreds.

Robert D. Carey.

The University

THIS volume of the WYO shows growth in the ambitions and resources of its editors and publishers, so is it an indication of the growth and prospects of the University. With the progress of Wyoming high schools, there has come to the doors of the University a constantly increasing stream of Wyoming young people. This year the University gives instruction to over 2300 students, 1400 of whom have, at some time during the year, carried on their work on the campus. During the past two years a number of splendid additions have been made to the buildings and material equipment of the University. A continuance of the University's share in the federal oil royalties has made possible an inspiring plan for future development. Continued for a few years, this will give Wyoming a wonderful material equipment.

Our faculty and a wonderfully alert student body are intensely attacking the problems of Wyoming. With the increased knowledge of the possibilities and resources of Wyoming, the enthusiasm of the University is rising. No institution in America has a brighter prospect for more rapid growth and accomplishment than has the University of Wyoming. I congratulate you students of the University and the readers of the WYO upon the part which you may perform in this development. I congratulate the future citizens of Wyoming upon the opportunities that will be theirs. Wyoming does not desire that her University be the largest but that it be the best.

WILLIAM B. ROSS
Governor of the State of Wyoming

THE STATE

F, above all else, there is some one thing for which the young man and young woman of today are looking and for which they have a right to look, I believe it is "opportunity."

I mean to use the word in its broadest and truest sense. I speak of opportunity not of the silver platter kind which breeds indolence, wastefulness and unhealthy citizenship, but rather, of that type of opportunity which beckons the honest, and the sturdy, and the industrious to come and be served of its fruits.

Such is the call and invitation which Wyoming extends today and to such an extent do I consider the term "opportunity" and the name "Wyoming" to be synonymous.

Especially is this true, as I stated at the beginning of this short article, to the young man and young woman. Wyoming,—Wyoming with its vast wealth and the alluring and unlimited resources which provident nature has so kindly placed within her domain, seems to say to those who are about to embark upon their life's work: "Come, if you are worthy, and share in the incomparable opportunities which I hold in abundance."

But, as firmly as I believe in Wyoming and as firmly as I believe in the possibilities of those who choose her protection, her generosity, and her companionship, just as firmly do I believe that their reward will be only commensurate with their fairness, their integrity, and the worthiness of their ambitions.

So, to those whose purposes are sincere and whose principles are unquestioned I am glad of the privilege to say that if you already call Wyoming your home, it is my hope that you will continue to do so; and that if you now live elsewhere but are looking for opportunity of the right sort, I believe you will find it here. And, to the students of the University of Wyoming, do I especially want to say that I am convinced that you are of the right calibre, physically, mentally, and morally to join in the upbuilding of your own great state and by your efforts to be plenteously rewarded.

Grow up with Wyoming. For, again let me say, Wyoming means opportunity.

The Board of Trustees and the State

WHEN the pioneers and early builders of what is now Wyoming participated in the creation of the political division then known as the territory of Wyoming they wisely provided for an institution of higher learning. This act was later accepted and amplified when statehood was attained and adequate measures and methods provided for its growth and support.

The Board of Trustees, who are in a sense the stewards of this institution, are appointed by the governor of the State. This plan, in my judgment, is better than that of election for the reason that the governor may consider geographical locations, as well as the special qualifications of those to be honored with this high responsibility.

There are nine appointive members of the board and three ex officio members—the governor, the state superintendent of public instruction and the president of the University. The board of trustees embraces representatives of at least two political parties, and is at present graced by three of Wyoming's most talented women. The present board is as follows: W. C. Deming, president, Cheyenne; Dean T. Prosser, vice president, Tie Siding; Fred W. Geddes, treasurer, Centennial; J. A. Elliott, Wheatland; Mary N. Brooks, Casper; E. W. Croft, Cowley; Anna Haggard, Cheyenne; D. P. B. Marshall, Sheridan;

Board of Trustees in the meeting in which plans for the new gymnasium were adopted.

F. A. Holliday, Laramie. Ex Officio: A. G. Crane, Laramie; Wm. B. Ross, Cheyenne; Katharine A. Morton, Cheyenne. Fay E. Smith, secretary; E. O. Fuller, fiscal agent.

The board chooses its own president and other officers, is charged with the duty of electing a president of the University when there is a vacancy, and must approve or disapprove the appointment of deans and professors when recommended by the president of the University.

An important function of the board of trustees is keeping a careful watch over the finances of the institution, to the end that efficiency may be attained and extravagance prevented. The board authorizes the erection and equipment of buildings, and the physical growth of the institution is limited only by their discretion and the means at their command. They are the direct agents of the people, the patrons and the taxpayers.

To the extent that the members of the board of trustees are conscientious, competent and diligent, they will formulate and promote a policy which means success for the University of Wyoming and which will meet with the approval of the people of the State, in whose interest the University is maintained.

FRANCIS E. WARREN
The Senior Senator from Wyoming

HAVE read, with interest, about the plans you have made for the University's 1923 official year-book, and I desire to offer my best wishes for the abundant success of the work and for the continued growth and prosperity of our State's great University.

I trust that your endeavor to show the close relationship existing between State and University may have the desired effect of developing interest in quarters that now may seem somewhat apathetic.

Especially do I hope that the young men and women who are to be graduated this spring from Wyoming high schools may consider the merits of their own University before deciding to continue their educational pursuits in the larger eastern colleges. Whether a business or a profession may be the goal, there are many advantages to be derived from attendance at our home University, where association with the school friends of today may be followed by association with the business and professional friends of tomorrow—for it is of course a foregone conclusion that ninety-five per cent. of us intend to continue our residence in Wyoming!

I send kindest greetings to you and your staff. May your Alma Mater be as kind to you as her name implies, and may you always be proud of her and loyal to your associates under her care.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN B. KENDRICK
The Junior Senator from Wyoming

I

T WAS a fortunate circumstance that the founders of the University of Wyoming appreciated the value of the training and discipline afforded by higher education and placed the University on such an excellent foundation. It is a happy situation, too, that the standards which they established have been consistently maintained.

Measured by the progress of the past, the University of Wyoming is destined to become a great center of education. Everyone who is even superficially informed as to the resources of the State can visualize in a way, the population and wealth which will be a part of the future; but I am sometimes impressed with the thought that only those who have been privileged to witness practically all the development up to the present time, are qualified to judge as to the possibilities and potentialities of the future.

With such increases in population and wealth must come increased advantages, both in the common schools and the field of higher education. This need has already been well recognized and given consideration in the development of the University. There is, however, a growing conviction that the opportunity for university training ought to be made available to every boy and girl in the State, thus carrying out the fundamental principle of equality expressed in the Declaration of Independence. In theory they now enjoy equal opportunity but in practice it too often happens that financial circumstances prevent the student from availing himself of it. The elimination of this inequality is an inspiring task, that ought to challenge the best efforts of those men and women who have enjoyed the benefits that the University has afforded them. They may well consider it an obligation that they owe to the University that has done so much for them and a responsibility to the young men and women of the future.

While the people of the state now generally appreciate the benefits and service that the University is rendering, it will remain for that ever increasing army of men and women who claim it as their Alma Mater to bring a full understanding of its true significance and importance in the educational life of the State and Nation. It is their task to continue to build on the foundation which has been so well laid. If they plan wisely and cooperate earnestly, they have it within their power to make the University of Wyoming a great educational center, the influence of which will be nationwide.

John B. Kendrick

FRANK W. MONDELL
Director, War Finance Corporation

AM pleased to send a greeting to the students and faculty of the University of Wyoming, and I am particularly pleased that my greeting is to be carried in this edition of the WYO.

Our commonwealth has many things to be proud of. As a people we have been unusually fortunate in the wise and thoughtful provision that has been made for our public institutions. We are particularly fortunate in our University, in the firm foundation on which it has been established and in the assurance of its future growth and development. The people of Wyoming wisely decided to build up one rather than a multiplicity of State educational institutions. Having adopted this wise policy we have been fortunate that all those who have had to do with our public affairs have been interested in the University and far sighted in making provisions financially, and otherwise insuring its permanence and steady growth.

We may safely predict for the University of Wyoming a future of high honor and wide usefulness as one of the great educational institutions of the Inter-Mountain West.

Very truly yours,

F. M. Woodruff

TO THE People of Wyoming, In behalf of the official year-book of the University of Wyoming, and its Editors and Managers, the Junior Class,

GREETINGS:

It is an omen of good for the future of our beloved State when a class of the student body of our University interests itself and performs work in the issuance of a publication to set forth faithfully and graphically, in picture and article, the marvelously varied resources and activities of our great commonwealth. Our scenery is unsurpassed, if not incomparable; and the beautiful and significant views presented herein should be matter of interest, pride and inspiration to every citizen. I bespeak co-operation as well as appreciation of this admirable effort and a realization of its relation to our growing State Educational Institution in whose able Board of Trustees, efficient President and Faculty, and splendid student body we have every faith.

Cordially,

Charles E. Winter

F. E. LUCAS

The University and the State

DURING a residence of nearly a quarter of a century in the State of Wyoming I have been intensely interested in the development of our State University, and I have watched it grow from what in the old days was termed in certain sections a "Laramie High School" to one of the leading educational institutions in the West, and it has indeed been a pleasure to note the change in the attitude of the people toward the University. This change in the feelings of the people, in my opinion, has been caused by the ever-increasing efficiency of the University and a closer co-operation between the institution and the taxpayers and the law-making body. In days long past, perhaps, the University may have enjoyed the feeling of self-sufficiency due to liberal endowments and grants, but more recently there has been evidenced a desire for a closer unity, both on the part of the officials of the University and the people of the State.

In the winter of 1921 I had the pleasure of being present at a joint session of the Legislature of the State which was attended by the entire student body of the University, and this winter I attended a session of the Legislature at the University, and I was greatly impressed with the enthusiasm of the students and the faculty and their loyalty to their school. This enthusiasm and loyalty is certain to be reflected throughout all sections of the state and will greatly influence future development. My desire is to see the Wyoming State University grow until it excels all others—not only in enrollment, but in wealth and facilities for education and the development of those who attend both in mind and body, and I predict that under the present efficient management that day is not far distant.

The Alumni and the University

DOES an alumnus of a university owe allegiance to his Alma Mater?

Every student is conscious of the fact that it is his privileged duty to support his university while he is in residence upon the campus. Should he withdraw his support when he is no longer an active participant in university life, and allow his Alma Mater to work out her own destiny without his aid and council?

Every loyal alumnus has obligations placed upon him by virtue of the benefits which he derives from the educational and cultural advantages supplied him while in college. His successes in life are cherished by his Alma Mater for they justify her very existence and make possible her support and growth. In return he should at all times be an ardent supporter of the ideals for which she stands. He should impress upon the citizens of his community the advantages of a college training, thereby stimulating others to seek such advantages. He should go a step further and impress upon them the advantages of a collegiate course in the University of Wyoming for Wyoming men and women. In order to do this successfully it is necessary that he keep in touch with developments on the campus. He should return whenever possible and learn of the changes which are taking place. He should come back when others come so as to renew old acquaintances. Cultivate the class spirit while in college and return with your class-mates.

An alumnus of a university who has lost touch with his Alma Mater is in somewhat the same situation as the man without a country.

Liberal Arts and the University

EVERY human being is faced by three commanding intellectual problems so long as he lives upon this planet. The first is the problem of the vast world of nature, the world of things outside him, the largest and outermost circle, within which his whole life is spent. The answers to the problem, so far as given at all are given in mathematics and the sciences. The liberally educated man needs to know, the elements of mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology.

The second is the problem of mankind, the world of persons outside him, the smaller circle inside the vaster circle of nature. Within this large but lesser circle he must also spend his life. The answers to the problem are written in what we may call history, the whole record of the collective activity of the race. Here the mother study is history, and for us the history of our own civilization, political and economic studies should also be known for their revelation of the fundamental laws of government and business.

The third is the problem of individual man, the tiny world of self, the center of our interest in the large world of mankind and the larger world of nature. Here is the fixed center of all our education, whatever be its circumference. Here we learn to know ourselves in language and then in literature, thus also extending our knowledge outward into the ever near world of mankind.

The three problems converge in one. Man's knowledge of nature and mankind assemble in himself. What explains all three? Philosophy, that attempts the whole problem, and if it does not solve all the problems, shows clearly what the problem is. Such is the order and summation of the knowledge that liberates and liberalizes man. The College of Liberal Arts exists to acquaint us with the knowledge.

Liberal Arts and the State

IT IS trite to say that we are living in an age of specialists. In every line of human endeavor the demand for many years has been for men and women who are specifically trained to do certain specific things. So it is but natural that the schools and the colleges should have yielded to this demand and tried in every way to meet it. Two or three generations ago the curricula of the higher educational institutions of this country, as well as those of England and many of the European states, were alike in many respects. The great foundation subjects, namely the classics, mathematics, pure science, philosophy, history, economics, the modern languages, ethics and a few courses in the fine arts were about the only things studied. Courses everywhere were based on these, and for the most part were prescribed, election, at least until far into the last century, only being allowed in the later years of the course, and then only to a limited degree. But with the tremendous development of science a great change came about. Not only was the elective system almost universally adopted and applied, even from the beginning of the various courses, but all sorts of subjects which hitherto had only been looked upon either as secondary or as practical applications of principles supposed to have been studied were admitted to the curricula. The result has been that the number of things now being studied in the different schools and colleges in the United States is almost as large, as one critic has put it, as the number of stars in the milky way.

The question naturally arises what has been the result of this great multiplication of courses and of the freedom of election? Are the young men and women whom the colleges are turning out better prepared to cope with the tasks that confront them than were their forbears of previous generations? In other words does modern education educate as well as did the education of say fifty years ago? Undoubtedly many people will answer emphatically, "Yes," and give as their best argument the fact that the world is always growing and progressing and that this law of growth and progress must hold in the realm of education just as much as it does elsewhere. And yet there is a very influential group that argues just the other way, and this group has been growing both in prominence and numbers, especially since the war. This group admits that the old education was too rigid and that modification and greater freedom were needed, but they also contend that the pendulum has swung too far and that the result has been confusion and chaos. They say that liberty has degenerated into license, that freedom in many instances has been gained at the expense of thoroughness, that non-essentials have been given just as important places as the greater fundamental things, and that absence of any restraint in election has resulted in all sorts of disproportionate training. This is attested, they claim, by freak degrees and a lop-sided educational product.

This view of the situation has been receiving endorsement in many directions and from many great leaders. College presidents of distinction, literary men of high standing, statesmen, publicists, leaders in finance and business, in the newspapers and reviews, in magazines and books are making an earnest plea for broader and deeper foundations and a more thorough training in the fundamentals. They are recognizing and emphasizing as never before that education consists not so much in the acquisition of a lot of facts, or a certain sort of technical training, as it does in teaching a man to think, to take facts or situations as he finds them and then to apply the principles he has learned to the working out of the problem that may confront him. Viewed in this light that old argument "What good is Latin, I'm never going to use it," falls to the ground. It is not primarily a question of utility but of training—training in memory, in accuracy, in thoroughness, in the ability to think.

The present writer, upon this basis, would make a plea for a general education first and for the specialized training later. Personally he feels that a grounding in the classics is just as useful as any of the so called practical subjects. When one stops to think that over one half of the English language is of Latin derivation it is evident that to acquire anything like an adequate mastery of one's mother tongue demands at least a reasonable familiarity with its sources. And of what inestimable benefit is the ability to speak and write reasonably correct English! Knowledge of a subject unaccompanied by the ability to tell any one else about it is of very little use, and yet there have been many colleges, and some of them, not hundreds of miles from here, whose scientific courses have made so little provision for English and kindred subjects that they turned out men who, aside from their technical training, were so poorly equipped that they will be handicapped all their lives. Out in the world practice will often improve their technical skill, but the foundations which they neglected to acquire when in college or university they can only supplement with the utmost difficulty. Then, too, such subjects as history and economics in a country whose safety and progress depend largely upon the intelligence of the average voter, how important they are! And illustration might be multiplied—for the writer hasn't even mentioned the tremendous part that religion and ethics play in the development of a well rounded man. And what of the fine arts? Are poetry and music, the drama, architecture, painting and sculpture, are these to have no part in our outlook and vision? To exclude them altogether would be to give education nothing but a "biscuit and bacon" foundation. To accept the doctrine of utility and to exclude only those things that will help us to obtain more bread and butter is to adopt the Thomas A. Edison and Henry Ford view of life, but the writer believes that neither the ability to electrify almost anything or to supply every family on earth with a "flivver" makes up for the lack of a liberal education, of a well balanced mind richly stored with the wealth of human experience, the ability to think and the contentment that passes riches.

What is your answer?

Women and the University

THE University of Wyoming serves the State in no more satisfactory way than in the education of its young women. They constitute nearly fifty per cent. of the student body, are contributing much to the leadership in the academic and the organization interests of the campus, and are accepting the new responsibilities of the day ably.

The Wyoming women of the past and present generations have done an inestimable work in the development of the State and there is yet a large work ahead to be done by the young college women of today. No organism can be adaptable to its environment if it is not sensitive to it. The girl's chief business in the University of Wyoming is personal enrichment of mind and character and the training of her powers that she may know and enjoy her splendid inheritance in a splendid land and be of service to it.

Agriculture and the State

ESPIE any temporary conditions to the contrary, Wyoming's greatest industry always has been and always will be agriculture and stock raising. Wyoming's claim for lasting greatness must be based on agriculture because wealth derived from any other source must necessarily diminish some great natural resource and when that resource is depleted, the wealth is gone. It is impossible to draw from oil or gas deposits without eventually depleting them; it is possible to draw crops from the soil without depleting its fertility. Our worth-while job then is to handle our soils so as to produce each year indefinitely the maximum amount of wealth and at the same time increase productivity.

It has been said that it requires a higher degree of intelligence to succeed as a farmer than to succeed as anything else. Be that as it may, it is certainly true that a Wyoming farmer has his share of adverse elements, adverse credit and adverse markets to overcome before he can succeed. It is just this training of always having to overcome something that makes your farmer the steady, consistent, dependable and indispensable citizen that he is today. Probably elements will always remain unruly, but credit and market facilities will improve and with their improvement will come added wealth to agriculture and a greater opportunity for the farmer to serve Wyoming.

Agriculture and the University

THE students who are studying in the Agricultural College have taken advantage of the opportunity to train themselves for the most important industry in existence today. They know that modern farming is a business that requires a wide technical knowledge and business ability. The hope of America is in the agricultural students of the next few years. Will there be enough of them, trained in leadership, possessing enough scientific and economic knowledge to solve our future problems of food supply, fighting off the pests, disease, and soil exhaustion that threaten everywhere?

Especially do we need trained agriculturists in a new state like Wyoming. Our problems are peculiar. Our climate is different, and our economic situation is unique. Here, at the University of Wyoming, is the only place that there is a chance to specialize on Wyoming agriculture.

The young people of Wyoming realize this. Our enrollment is growing rapidly. Their fathers realize it too so that we have been allowed funds for an almost unbelievable expansion in equipment and teaching staff.

Our graduates will serve Wyoming.

HAROLD SHEPHERD

Law and the University

NO PART of the University's alumni will be called upon to assume greater responsibilities and to participate more actively in the social and political life of the state than will the alumni of the law school. The relationship between lawyer and client is one of closest trust and confidence and calls for the practical application of the highest professional ethics and standards of personal honor. The property, liberty and oftentimes the life of a client are for the time being placed in the hands of an attorney who for that time becomes the extended legal personality of the client. Such a relationship places a tremendous responsibility both upon the law student and the law school. For the law school, it must take care that its lawyers are well and thoroughly trained and that the peculiar confidential relationships that they must have with the State's citizens be held always as sacred and honored trusts; it must thoroughly teach the lesson of personal honor and integrity, the inviolability of a client's interests; it must insist upon sound scholarship and industry—and all these to the end that both the lawyer and the layman shall respect the law as an honored and dignified profession, the end of which is the establishment of justice and the perpetuation of our vast legal and governmental heritage to future generations.

Law and the State

HAT the sea is to the ship the law is to the State. Without the law all is chaos and the dark ages still exist. A fair knowledge of the law is essential to the stability of the State and as this knowledge becomes more thorough and general among the people greater protection of life and liberty may be accorded.

The law as we understand the term today is the growth of rules of conduct that has been taking place since history was first recorded and from each cycle of time the law has emerged clearer and stronger until at this time exact justice between men, though never attained, is nearly attainable.

As a piece of machinery used for exact measurement or the performance of delicate and important work grows more intricate with each improvement so the law as it is extended and improved to meet and control human progress grows more complex. Yet each rule is based upon well founded reasons which time and experience have taught as essential to the regulation of the affairs of men.

Many people either through lack of opportunity or desire to know, failing to grasp the finer lines of demarkation between right and wrong or failing to understand the underlying principles, hold the mistaken belief that this whole structure of time tried and time honored rules which we know as the common law can be discarded and in the twinkling of an eye a new institution be set up in its place where property rights are unknown, and all shall work for and draw their substance from a common fund. A theory, utopian in its ideal, but impractical until such time as man has attained the moral and spiritual perfection exemplified by the Lowly Nazarene while on earth. This idea if carried to its logical conclusion can lead only along the bitter trail over which Russia has travelled in the last few years and which is now strewn with the wreck of human hopes, death and despair.

On the other hand we find those so ultra enthusiastic in their desire to protect the State that they elect themselves as persecutors of those suspected of doing wrong or those whose race or color lend the suspicions that unlawfulness is their habit.

In carrying out what seems to them to be laudable purposes, corporal punishment or banishment, or even in some cases death is inflicted without the formality of a trial of any sort, much less an orderly trial based upon the constitution where evidence is introduced under the time honored rules where facts and not suspicions are considered. These acts if carried to their logical conclusion can only lead to absolute anarchy; the utter destruction of constitutional law; the disrupting of Courts and juries who, ascertaining the facts and applying the law thereto, inflict punishment where punishment is due and protect rights where protection is due.

It is manifest that either of these two extremes is equally dangerous to society; That the middle course between them is safest and it is the duty of patriotic citizens to investigate the law and ideal of their State, lend such advice as they may have to its betterment and in times when crime is more prevalent lend their aid to legally constituted authority for the enforcement of the law through legally constituted Courts.

It would also seem clear that those who have attained that degree of knowledge of the law that entitled them to the name of Lawyers have a duty to perform. It should be for them to keep the good ship guided along the safe course that it may continue in its growth and become more efficient and better able to dispense exact justice and protection to mankind.

Commerce and the University

THE Division of Commerce exists for the purpose of providing the young men and women of the State an opportunity to acquire a thorough education in various fields of commercial activity. Realizing that people differ in their aptitudes, capacities, and preferences, the Division of Commerce provides training not only in Accounting, but also in Business Organization and Administration, Secretarial Work, and in the preparation of Teachers of Commercial Subjects. To meet the needs of those who cannot afford to remain for the full time of the four-year courses, opportunity is offered for a shorter period of training in the one-year Stenographic Course and the two-year Secretarial Course.

The measure of the worth of any course of instruction is the success achieved by those who have taken it. The Division of Commerce points with pride to the excellent records of many of its graduates.

The Teacher and the State

LONG time ago someone said that the common school was the hope of our country. Next to the pupil the teacher is the most important factor of the school. Each generation through its parenthood and the training of its children determines what the next shall be. Surely the teacher is one of the important factors in the development of the child. Since the children of today are the state of tomorrow there must exist a vital relationship between the teacher and the state. When men and women receive certificates from the State and accept positions as teachers of children they assume an ever increasing duty of loyalty and service to the State which is accorded to few. Because of the wonderful influence of the teacher on children and consequently on the future State, the State can ill afford to give this important responsibility to any except those of the highest possible type of manhood and womanhood.

It is an old saying, "As the teacher so the school." May we not as truthfully say, "As the teacher so the state."

J. J. Early,

C. R. MAXWELL

Education and the State

THE College of Education of the University of Wyoming has for its function, the training of teachers for the State. Because it is the only teacher training institution in Wyoming, it is necessary to provide facilities for the training of all classes of teachers. It has come to be recognized that teachers in different types of schools have their own peculiar problems, consequently courses are outlined to meet the specific needs of the teachers who will teach in the rural schools, in the elementary grades, for high school teachers, teachers of vocational subjects, and for teachers of classes of exceptional children.

It is recognized that one who is preparing for this important calling should have a thorough academic training, that he should have theoretical courses that give an introduction to the practice of the art, and that he should, in the course of his training, have an opportunity to begin the practice of the profession under competent guidance. To meet this latter need, the College of Education conducts training schools wherein students have an opportunity to secure their first experience under the supervision and direction of competent teachers.

The Summer School supplements the regular work in the College of Education and plays an effective part in the preparation of teachers. The fact that sixty per cent. of all teachers in the State during the year of 1921-22 were enrolled in Education, gives possibly the best idea of the service of the College of Education.

J. C. FITTERER

Dean of the College of Engineering

Engineering and the University

THE modern desire to eliminate distance, annihilate time and rapidly exploit Nature's secrets for their inherent wealth have all most strongly reacted upon the world of today. The leisurely living of past centuries has been transformed into a hurried existence, a feverish flurry, an accelerated chemical reaction—and relativity.

At the behest of his fellows the engineer bends accumulated training and experience to the satisfaction of varied demands. Perhaps a Nicaragua canal clamors for construction, maybe the Golden Gate needs bridging, perchance millions of acres west of the hundredth meridian await irrigation, or tons of minerals and underground reservoirs of oil seek the light of day. Cities require building, industry calls for the harnessing of idle waterpower and commerce is insistent upon safe and rapid transportation. New discoveries and inventions of themselves create needs in proportion to their ability to gratify. Among the more spectacular are found the airplane and the radio, which have opened doors to new realms but little dreamed of and less realized. Unknown continents of achievement mutely beckon to the bold adventurer.

For all of these education becomes imperative, and education itself responds to the requests made upon it both as to method and content. It readily becomes amenable to the laudable requirements of the world's work. The changing and expanding curricula in engineering colleges are evidences of such a tendency and presage still further modifications. A technical training becomes a lamp and a compass in the devious paths of the unknown, and it is these which our Alma Mater seeks to place in the hands of her devotees. To reach the goal of passable training her exactions of time and effort sometimes appear strenuous, but like every good mother she is well versed in the wisdom of life. Wyoming contains vast undeveloped resources, and Wyoming generously offers her youth—the active citizens of tomorrow—the opportunity to profit by a collegiate training and thus more readily to serve her many interests.

Engineering and the State

IT IS hard to imagine a line of endeavor followed in Wyoming in which an engineering training and education would not be a great benefit, if not an actual necessity. Wyoming's development must of necessity follow along two broad lines, namely, agriculture and mining.

Mining, of course, includes the development of all the State's mineral wealth. This, of course, offers a large field for all branches of engineering from a purely technical standpoint. Aside from this, a mind with an engineering training engaged in this work in any capacity would be anything but handicapped by the training. It is true that we find men at the head of all branches of this industry, some of whom, have not had an engineering education. In fact we find men high in this work who have had little or no collegiate training at all. However, none of these men could fail being greatly benefitted by such a training. In other words no executive, no matter how brilliant, would be any the less efficient because of this knowledge and in addition would have an understanding of the business not otherwise possible.

The greater portion of our agriculture is, and probably always will be, the result of irrigation. Here again we meet technical problems, which can be solved more easily and more intelligently by the man who is trained to do so. Again it does not seem reasonable to believe that this man would be any less successful as a farmer or stockgrower because of this training.

Interwoven with the State's development and really a part of all its branches is the question of roads. No question before the people of Wyoming today is as important as the road program. No question requires more careful and intelligent thought than this. It is also true that we have wasted huge sums on ill advised construction, both excusable and inexcusable. Wyoming has been truthfully said to be a state of "magnificent distances." This together with our small population and small taxable area makes it imperative that these blunders are not repeated. Here we meet problems that are purely local. Some of our most flagrant and unpardonable errors in road building have been committed by the best engineers. This sounds like a paradox, but the idea is that some of the fundamental local conditions have been ignored. A road may be ever so perfect as to gradient, alignment and economy of construction and still be of no value during half of each year if proper consideration is not given Wyoming snow storms and their habits. I am sure no Wyoming-trained engineer would fail to do "that little thing."

Music and the State

ALL OVER the land there is an intense and ever increasing realization of the value of music in our high schools, but the bigness of the subject presents many problems, the greatest of which is indefiniteness.

In our most progressive high schools in Wyoming it has been given its rightful place with time and credit as for other subjects and an instructor who has her own systematic plans which she is carrying out constructively and practically.

The larger high schools now offer history and appreciation of music, band, orchestra, boys' and girls' choruses, quartets, sight reading and credit for outside music, but the backbone of our work is our vocal organizations.

It is evident that the University cannot hope for an ideal situation in music until it receives students from our high schools who have had sufficient background of elementary training to enable them to take up the music work in our University and to go out competent to teach music properly.

We are realizing more and more that a thorough and intelligent study of music is of inestimable value in the development of character, taste, judgment, good citizenship and a finer subjective life, and we should give it its place in the curriculum of the Wyoming schools.

ROGER FRISBIE

Music and the University

THE Music School of the University of Wyoming is at this time the only school in Wyoming granting a degree in music. High standards are maintained and the regular music course is arranged in such a manner that not only applied music is well developed, but all the courses are thorough and certain required subjects in the College of Liberal Arts give a broad, general training, which is much desired.

The Music School is located in a fine, clean, live city. There are many musical attractions brought in by both the University and city organizations. The best talent available is secured, and coupled with the many faculty, choral and orchestral concerts, a music student has splendid opportunities to develop along musical lines.

Music fees are within the reach of every-one. Being a part of a State school makes this possible. Instruction is given in piano, pipe-organ, violin, voice, brass instruments, public school music and all branches of theory. The Music School is housed in its own building and has splendid equipment for its present needs. It directs a University band, orchestra, chorus, men's and women's glee clubs. The School of Music is in a flourishing condition and with continued support will be a school that the people of Wyoming may well be proud of.

Physical Education and the University

PHYSICAL Education is primarily health education, the fundamentals of which are hygiene, sanitation and exercise.

In all regions of life, exercise strengthens capacity and in physical education prevents the well trained mind from being lost to the world because of a poorly trained body. The University of Wyoming therefore, believes in a preparation, with a sane amount of exercise, which will make you strong of body, mind and heart.

The development of exertion, infallibility, unselfishness, justice, fairness and honor is just as important as that moral training and the self control which leads to self-mastery. Coupled with this training are those preventive measures, hygienic, physiologic and organic, administered from the earliest school age even through collegiate graduation and making for confidence, power and health. A man's physical and health education should be as broad as his mental education, for as is his physical stamina, so will be his usefulness and longevity.

Therefore the University of Wyoming believes in building up and maintaining the health of its students.

Physical Education and the State

THE responsibility of the state to care for the mentally and physically unfit has been accepted throughout the ages and why not accept wholeheartedly the doctrine of the responsibility of the state for the prevention of those conditions that through neglect, ignorance and illiteracy bring about the presence of the greater number of these aforementioned misfits. Various essentials and economic developments of the past fifteen years have conspired to force upon the various state governmental agencies a definite responsibility with relation to what has been termed physical education.

Only through the formative period of one's life can anything be accomplished with regard to habits and development both physically and mentally, and as a result of this what more natural than to include as an obligatory course in our schools the training of mind and body in habits of hygiene, safety, sanitation and health.

Though the home naturally suggests itself as the proper agency for giving young people, whether through example or precept, such guidance and information as they should receive regarding the meaning of physical education and living, yet the very fact that arouses the public to the need for such education themselves indicates the inability of the home to carry on the work alone.

In the wake of industrial revolution the family has lost many of its educational functions as well as many of its economic functions and what more natural than hand in hand with these changes for the schools to take over more and more many functions of the home. This is illustrated by the school teaching what to eat and how, elements of manners and morals, uses of simple hand tools and hundreds of other details of life that children formerly went without or picked up through their mere presence in a domestic environment that carried on all these basic social processes.

The time has arrived when the State, through its schools, in addition to teaching machinery and management of households must teach something of the meaning and conduct of the successful home, not as a rival to the home but as a parallel institution working to a mutual end. Every one should accept and encourage by example, precept and state funds the doctrine of the establishment by states and nations of definite standards and ideals of physical perfection of children of school age to be placed before pupils and parents and to do all those things to the end that every American child may build his life on a basis of sound physical health.

Extension and the University

THE Extension Service is a permanent nation-wide system of instruction in Agriculture and Home Economics which is carried on by the Agricultural College in co-operation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The principles underlying its conception are similar in all the States. The Extension idea grew out of the need of a means of giving rural people more definite help and instruction by putting to practice and general use the information which had been accumulated by the State Experiment Stations and the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The Extension Service functions for the benefit of all the people by aiding the development of agriculture, Wyoming's most important industry. It is essentially an educational system through which the University and the U. S. Department of Agriculture are extending fundamental and practical information on Agriculture and Home Economics to those who cannot attend the Agricultural College. The method of teaching is by demonstration and the correct application of information, thus developing and establishing the best practices in agriculture and home making.

The biggest job before the State of Wyoming today is that of developing its natural resources. Agriculture is by far the most important of these. If the Agriculturist fails, all other business will come to a standstill. The Extension Service in Wyoming is organized and conducted with the thought constantly in mind that if agriculture is to be developed profitably and wisely, there are certain fundamental and vital things to be done.

In livestock, in dairying, in hog raising, in poultry, in crop production and soil management, in bee culture, in disease and insect control, in cooperative and rural organization enterprises, in marketing and in problems of home making, there are principles and information which if correctly used and applied will make for a better and more profitable agriculture.

It is the job therefore of the Extension service through its County Agricultural Agents, Home Demonstration Agents, Boys' and Girls' Clubs and State and Federal Specialists to diffuse information, demonstrate correct application of principles, encourage community activity, train local leadership, foster concerted action and develop the best methods in production, in marketing and in home making.

Extension and the State

ANY agencies are helping in the progress and development of agriculture in our State. Until rather recently its advancement has been slow, due largely to the fact that the sections helped were confined largely to small areas immediately surrounding our College and its Experiment Farms. The Extension Service of the University of Wyoming finds its field in taking new thoughts and ideas from the College and Experiment Stations out into the rural communities to the individual farmer on his farm. This agency has probably been of more real help to him than any other. The man on the farm cannot always attend College nor visit Experiment Stations for the information he needs. Neither has this information been available in a form which rural men and women could understand. The Extension Service functioning through people who have the farmer's viewpoint is able to parcel out this information in usable form, so that the busy farmer can easily interpret its meaning.

Military Training and the State

OURS is not a militaristic nation. The American people have never been called upon to bear the burden of huge standing armies. Until the World War, thousands of citizens of the United States had never seen the uniform of the American soldier, and a thousand times that number had little or no conception of his duties; of the training he must undergo; of the vast machinery necessary to put an army into the field, and to instill into it that rigorous and essential discipline so necessary to win success in battle.

Today, our country was never better informed on these things. But we are likewise confronted with the problem of reconciling an inherent national distaste for militarism with that desire for national preparedness which good judgment begets.

Our federal government is committed to the policy of a small regular military establishment. The responsibility for maintaining the elements requisite for quick military expansion in time of need has been delegated to the states, and to the individuals in those states.

The federal government provides for the first line of defenses in the regular army. The states must care for the second line in the National Guard. The individuals, Veterans of the World War, graduates of Student Army Training Corps and Citizens Military Training Camps, must provide for the third through the Officers Reserve Corps.

It is the duty of every state to provide the means for an efficient National Guard and for military instruction in its schools and universities. It is the State's duty to see that its young men are prepared, ready to step forth as citizen soldiery in defense of the Union, ready to join with the active army in proclaiming the Star Spangled Banner as the emblem of freedom and justice, the banner of a unified country, never flaunted at the battle front save in the aggression of right.

The state which fails to accept these responsibilities is derelict in its duty to the Nation, to its sister states, and to one of the concepts of our splendid Americanism which demands that we be prepared in all things.

Military Training and the University

THE MILITARY DEPARTMENT has been in operation since 1892 and in the thirty-one years of its existence has given some degree of military training to more than fifteen hundred Wyoming men. During the World War nearly five hundred of its students or former students served their country in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and of these one hundred and seventeen were commissioned officers. It has inspired many of its students to take up the military life as a career and today the University is represented in the Regular Army and Navy by about twenty commissioned officers.

The Military Department now functions under the National Defense Act of June 4, 1920, maintaining in conformity therewith an Infantry Unit of the Reserve Officers Training Corps, Senior Division. As such, it furnishes the only institution for officer training within this State. Its graduates on successfully completing the Advanced Course, R. O. T. C., which runs for four years and includes at least one summer camp of six weeks duration, are commissioned as 2nd Lieutenants, in the Infantry branch of the Officers Reserve Corps. Since June, 1922, thirteen students have accepted commissions and have been assigned to reserve organizations in Wyoming, which means that in the event of war, University of Wyoming men will lead Wyoming troops.

The Military Department develops individual leadership. It fosters and disseminates the ideals of patriotism, duty, service. It endeavors within its sphere to keep alive the spirit that animated our country in 1776, 1861 and 1917. It is an institution for better citizenship, more complete Americanism. And as such it serves the State of Wyoming.

Vocational Education and the State

THE entire world has made rapid strides in Vocational Work in the past few years. Wyoming, due to her vast undeveloped resources has and is offering the most in opportunities for the man and woman seeking Vocational Training.

The U. S. Government is carrying on an extensive program for her disabled ex-service men, and the State is offering the industrially disabled an opportunity for readjustment.

My relation with the State institutions has shown me that they are more than willing, they are anxious to do all in their power to aid in this work.

The only remaining need, in order that this work may be carried on successfully, is for trained men and women. It calls for the utmost in every one associated with it. The workers must be willing, to a great extent, to hold in their hands the destiny of those seeking a road to greater things. Wyoming, through its State institutions is offering you this opportunity.

Vocational Education and the University

ONE of the marked advances in Education during recent years has been the tendency towards democracy. This has made itself felt, not only in the content of the curriculum, but even far more in the arrangement of courses such that everyone may have an opportunity for whatever education they may desire. This tendency has been much accentuated by the problem of the rehabilitation of the ex-service men. The United States government has provided the way for them and put the responsibility upon the colleges and universities of our country to arrange such courses as would admit these men regardless of the amount of previous training they have had. In order to meet this responsibility, the University of Wyoming has added courses for farmers and ranchmen; in poultry and sheep husbandry; and also for applied work in electricity. In addition to these courses, work is also offered in the field of commerce, business and petroleum technology. In all these courses the emphasis is on the practical side. The men in the agricultural courses own their own stock, having direct instruction in all matters pertaining to their care and use. Over eighty ex-service men from many parts of the Union have been at Laramie taking these courses. It is the purpose of the administration to make this work a permanent part of the University's offerings and thus to enlarge the services which the University may render to the people of Wyoming.

Home Economics and the University

THIS is the aim of the Home Economics Department of the University of Wyoming to give such training to the young women of the State as will make them more efficient home makers and citizens of the community and the State. It is our purpose to supply training and inspiration which will assist young women in becoming leaders in the various enterprises involved in the improvement of the economic and social conditions of American home life.

Scientific effort in behalf of the homes, the schools, and the community, daily practice of hygiene, economy, and social service are the logical results to be expected from students taking Home Economics.

Many homes in Wyoming have felt the influence of the University through the women who have studied here. Education, arts, and industries have been benefitted by their leadership.

Correspondence and the University

THE developments of the last few years have clearly demonstrated the effectiveness of, and the necessity for, University teaching by correspondence.

The University of Wyoming, along with the foremost American Universities, has recognized this opportunity for specific service by extending its work beyond the lecture room and the campus. Through the correspondence department, it offers a plan of practical instruction whereby training is made available to those who of necessity must devote a part of their time to other duties, and hence cannot attend classes.

Besides educational courses, designed especially for the benefit of the rural teachers of the State, it offers courses leading to college and high school degrees. Courses are given in practically all lines of academic work, including Agriculture, Botany, Commerce, English, Geology, Home Economics, History, Mathematics, Mining, Psychology, Modern Languages, Political Economy, Political Science and Zoology.

Because of the increased number of students who are taking advantage of the opportunity of these offers, the department has increased with amazing rapidity, the total enrollment now being 998 students.

In addition to the services given by the Director and two full time readers, all departments in the University co-operate with the Correspondence Department and each corrects the papers of its own courses, thus giving the non-resident student the advantage of the same expert instruction as is given the resident student.

Teaching by correspondence has thus become a part of Wyoming's educational system, and has broadened it so that it now makes education possible to every person in the most remote district of our vast State who is willing to make the effort to get it.

BACKGROUND

WHO are privileged to attend the University of Wyoming seldom think of the pioneers and early settlers of the State who made such an institution possible. Years before Wyoming became an entity, when her rolling praries and upflung cliffs were still the possessions of the skulking redman and the wailing coyote, when the antelope still roamed the hills unafraid and the buffalo little feared the puny tribes of men, hardy trappers and traders and explorers were busy laying the solid foundations of future settlements, driving back and subduing the Indians, searching out the most fertile spots, laying out trails and roads, and making the country fit for the civilization which was to follow. We cannot understand—we who now enjoy the fruits of what those hardy men achieved—we cannot properly understand or appreciate what we now have without some knowledge of the sacrifices which have been made for us, and the privations which have been suffered that we might enjoy comparative luxury.

The spirit of the pioneer, it may be, is dying from our race, but there is still a feeling of veneration for such names as Lewis and Clark and Colter and Pike and Bonneville, and for all the others whose part in the drama of the Winning of the West has given their names down to posterity. Romance still rides in the stories of the Mormons, in the tales of the Indian fighters, in the epics of the missionaries who braved privation and death to spread their beliefs abroad. Appreciation still exists for the work of the gold seekers, who sought for wealth but founded a civilization, for the cowboy and the rancher, the sheepman and his covered wagon, the homesteader, and the railroad, and for the many other less important links in the conquest of the West.

Ah, not for gain nor garish show
Lay we this broad foundation stone;
Not for ourselves do we bestow
This largess of our desert zone,
But for the future freemen great,
Who mold the welfare of the State.

THUS began the poem read by H. V. S. Groesbeck at the laying of the cornerstone of the University, September 27, 1886, the final step in the Winning of the West. The event was the culmination of a series of legislation initiated by Colonel Stephen Wheeler Downey, who has since been called "The Father of the University." Several years later the Wyoming Student, now called The Branding Iron, in an article on the history of the University, carried this paragraph: "From early days Colonel Downey had desired the erection of a University, and when the monument at Sherman was about to be erected he had written to Honorable O. Ames endeavoring to persuade him to found and endow a University for Wyoming. In this he was unsuccessful, but, from time to time, he spoke favoring such an institution, and in 1886 championed the bill in the Territorial Legislature making an appropriation for the same. The bill finally passed and after a long fight it was decided to locate it at Laramie. It was not until 1891.

however, after more hard work, that the University was made a reality. Of the new board of trustees after reorganization Colonel Downey was made president, in which position he served a long time. As a member of the Second and Third State Legislatures he endeavored to keep the University at Laramie and was successful, though a hard fight was made against it."

The first building, University Hall, was begun in 1886, on the 27th of September, when the cornerstone was laid. The process of building went on during the remainder of that year and the next. The first building was not completely finished, however, until several years afterward. The downstairs rooms and those upstairs necessary for classes were completed first, and Dr. Hebard reports that when she first came to take up her duties in 1891, the shavings had not yet been swept from the floors in what is now the English Department rooms, and those occupied by the departments of History and Political Economy.

The first faculty was elected August 30, 1887, and boasted six people on the staff, besides President John W. Hoyt, first president of the University and ex-governor of the Territory of Wyoming. Two names in the list of the first faculty are still familiar to us: Aven Nelson, who was then professor of biological sciences, and Justus F. Soule, instructor in Greek and Latin. The other members were Miss Elizabeth Arnold, W. I. Smith, A. M. Sawin, and J. D. Conley. It is said that Aven Nelson, who is now the head of the Department of Botanical Sciences, was the first member of the original faculty to arrive on the campus. At that time the enclosure about the then unfinished main building was without grass or trees or shrubs, and held neither beauty in itself nor promise of better things. It is interesting to note that no record can be found of Dr. Aven Nelson's original election to the faculty. It may yet be found that he has no right to his chair in the University, but in such a case his many friends would see that he was speedily re-instated.

John W. Hoyt, the first president of the University, was in many respects a remarkable and versatile man. He had been governor of Wyoming when it was still a territory, and was an M. D. and LL. D., and stood among the very few Americans who have ever been knighted by a foreign monarch. Mr. Hoyt received the knighthood from Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria for his services in the field of education while on an European trip in the interest of educational research. So well did he understand the needs of this new country, and so well could he see into the future and anticipate demands yet unheard of, that the University owes as much, or more, to him for its growth and success as to any other one man. With a faculty of only seven members, counting himself, he planned out a variety and array of courses scarcely surpassed even at the present time. An examination of the first catalog printed by the University is a surprising one, when viewed in the light of the situation existing at the time.

The scope of the first curriculum has had an interesting effect on the present range and situation of the University. Placed in a new country, surrounded by thousands of acres of virgin soil, President Hoyt foresaw that a course in vocational agriculture would some day be in demand, and consequently incorporated such a college in his original plan, at a time when agricultural education was a mere experiment even in districts distinctly given over to farming. Naturally there was no demand for this course during several years, but it remained listed in the catalog of the University. When the need began to be felt there was a movement in the Legislature to found a Wyoming Agricultural College elsewhere, preferably in Lander. Friends of the institution, however, pointed out that according to the University and Capitol Building Law, under which the University existed, the State College and all of its departments should be situated in Laramie, and that, thanks to President Hoyt, a department of Agriculture has been a part of the University since its foundation. As a result the present University includes the important Agricultural Department, as well as the State Farms and the Extension Department, which have not only added greatly to its prestige as a college, but have enabled it to spread its influence for good over the State with greater facility.

The University has had twelve men in charge of its affairs since the beginning, as follows:

School began in the fall of 1887, with an attendance of sixty-two students. Only five of these, however, were of college rank, the others entering for high school work in what is now the State Training Preparatory School. In commenting on the situation at the end of the first term, The Sentinel of December 24, 1887, says:

"The first term of the University of Wyoming closes today. The week has been spent upon examinations and reviews, and the exercises wind up this afternoon with a rhetorical and musical program to which the public is invited. There have been sixty-two students in attendance this first term and several more will be added upon the opening of the second term, January 10, 1888. The faculty, officials, and the whole Territory are to be congratulated upon the bright prospect which spreads out before the institution."

The estimated cost of attending school for a year in 1887 was $250 to $300, which goes to prove that an education is worth more in these days than it was then. This estimate is taken from the first catalogue, issued in 1887-88. While this early catalogue contained only 27 pages, against the 275 in that of last year, the difference between the number of courses offered then and now is not nearly so large as might be expected.

Assembly for the first few years was held where the main administration offices now are, in Main Hall. The Library was in the rooms now used by the English department. In the same rooms the University Museum was situated. By September, 1903, the library had become so large, due greatly to the efforts of Dr. Hebard, that it was moved to the first floor, where it has remained ever since. At about that time agitation was

Miss Reba Davis, September, 1911—

The first commencement at the University took place in 1888, when a number of students graduated from the Preparatory school. The first graduation of University students occurred June 7th, 1891, when two men, William H. Bramel of Laramie, and Frank V. Quinn of Evanston, took their degrees. As a part of the Commencement exercises a declamation contest was held, and it is interesting to note that Miss June E. Downey, who is now head of the Psychology Department and the author of several important books, took first prize. Hon. Clarence D. Clark of Evanston delivered the first annual Commencement address.

Finance has played an important part in the growth of the University of Wyoming, as in all such institutions. The main source of revenue has been the University lands, which were selected for the school early in its life by a committee headed by Colonel S. W. Downey. As Wyoming was then relatively an unsettled wilderness, the selection of this land was more or less guesswork, and there was much criticism, at the time, of the sections finally chosen by Colonel Downey and his fellow committeemen. He had proceeded in a businesslike way, however, and his selections have proved rarely fortunate. The lands chosen have in many instances been found to contain valuable deposits of gold, silver, coal and other minerals, including oil, and the money derived from this source has helped materially in placing the University on its feet, financially speaking.

The growth of athletics at the University is quite interesting. Originally the Physics laboratory was used also as a gymnasium, with Dean Soule in charge of the work there. As a result of his interest in athletics a football team was soon organized, but since there were not enough men in the University for a complete team, Dean Soule and several town men also played on the squad. Games were scheduled with the local high school, with Cheyenne High, a team from Greeley, and a team composed of local men. No organized form of intercollegiate athletics was attempted for several years, largely because no regular coach could be found and because the team was not strictly a University lineup. After the first graduation, in 1891, a college team was organized, and after 1894 the amateur coach ceased to play with the squad. Several games were scheduled with Colorado teams, and in 1898 Captain Yates of the Military Department was put on as coach. Track athletics and baseball in the spring had long been going on in unorganized form, and these were now made a part of the University's athletic program. Captain Yates was a good gymnast, and in addition to giving training for the various games he offered a regular gymnasium course. He gave his athletes an all-round physical training which proved highly successful on the field. The team of 1896, however, was the only University football team which has never met defeat. Since the work of Captain Yates the University has always had paid coaches to take care of the athletic program.

Military drill began in 1891. The first few years should have been very exciting, since the "army" was limited to two or three squads. Practically every man could be an officer. Thanks to financial aid from the government and compulsory drill for men, the Department of Military Science grew rapidly, and excited a great deal of jealousy among the women of the University, who envied the men their long trousers uniforms with striped legs. Accordingly a girl's battalion was organized in 1902-03, under the command of Captain Yates. The women wore dark uniforms with white stripes about the neck and hem, and drilled with wooden guns, though at first with broomsticks. In competitive drill the women are said to have outclassed the men, but were never allowed to compete for a prize. After 1905, the institution of co-ed drill ceased, but whether by the wish of the women to rest upon their laurels or through the influence of the humiliated men is not known. The building of the gymnasium had much to do with it, however. The largest enrollment in the Military Department was in 1918, at the time of the S. A. T. C. Then for the first time, the cadets wore the uniform of the regular army. The custom has been kept up ever since, and the special insignia of the cowboy, worn on the left shoulder, has been worked out so that members of the Wyoming R. O. T. C. may be distinguished from the Regulars.

The war record of the University has been particularly good. During the Spanish war the student body gave one man to its country, C. L. Johnson by name. Many others enlisted, but came back safe. The Great War claimed 11 men out of the many who entered the service from the University. Several men from the University have attained position in the Army, notably Herbert Brees, who enlisted as a private in the Spanish War, but who attained the rank of Colonel in the World War through sheer military ability, and Harol D. Coburn, who attained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. Captain

Irwin, who is now in the Military Department, is a graduate of the University, and a veteran of the World War.

Since the first, students and faculty of the University have been interested in publications and in literary work. The early programs given in the Auditorium are replete with announcements of orations, original papers, and poems. The first important publication was a sort of literary magazine printed as a souvenir through the efforts of the first graduation class in 1891. It contained the graduating orations, and several essays on current topics written by the graduates, as well as papers by the various members of the faculty. The Catalogs, which tell an interesting history of the University, have been issued regularly since the first year. The Melange, which started in 1908 as a periodical magazine, has since changed its form and become the well known University bulletin. Along this same line the Department of Agriculture has issued numerous bulletins of great value to the farmers and ranchmen of the State.

Among the important special publications is Chronicles, a collection of pictures and historical material relating to the University, published under the editorship of Miss Amy G. Abbot and at the expense of the Alumni Association in 1911, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the University's foundation. To this book we are indebted for much of the material found in this section. Another important publication was the War Service Bulletin issued under the editorship of Dr. Grace Raymond Hebard, in 1919.

Among student publications the outstanding members are the Wyoming Student and the Junior Annual. The Wyoming Student was begun as a sort of literary magazine in 1898, under the editorship of Chas. L. Rigdon, a Junior in the University. In this form it continued with varying sizes and shapes until 1913, when it was changed to a newspaper, during the editorship of Miss Agnes Wright, who is now editor of the national Pi Beta Phi magazine. Since that time its size and importance have gradually increased until at present there is agitation for bi-weekly publication and increased size, with a paid editorial staff. It has created a demand for a chair of journalism at the University, and has aroused considerable interest in the art of newswriting. During the present year, in response to a feeling that the old name was antiquated and unfitted to a newspaper, especially in such a distinctive university as Wyoming, it has been officially changed to The Branding Iron. The new name has met with general approval, since it carries out the Cowboy traditions of the State and its University in an individual and striking manner.

The Junior Annual, called the Wyo, was begun in 1909, and has steadily increased in importance and fineness through the succeeding publications. Its first editor was Miss Leslie Cook, who still resides in Laramie, and who has been for several years an instructor in English in Laramie High School.

From an enrollment of five college students in 1887 the attendance has increased in thirty-five years to nearly six hundred in 1922-23, during the regular winter terms. The summer school, begun in 1905, with an enrollment of 27, has also become a very important factor in State education, having an enrollment of well over 600 last year. From an original faculty of six the number of teachers has grown to something like eighty-five, and beginning with the first unfinished building in 1887 the thirty-five intervening years have seen an increase of eleven—counting the new library—making twelve in all. With the present building program in full swing, next fall will see at least two more buildings nearing completion.

And thus from humble beginnings, and through the untiring efforts of a few who have sacrificed themselves for the generations of the future, our University has grown and sent out its influence into the remotest corners of the State it is pledged to serve. From an experiment was born a mighty institution, alive and increasing in importance with each succeeding year. From the seed has sprung the oak, from the idea has come the edifice, and from the ideal has arisen the monument which will reach down into the future and give bounteously to the many the fruits of the sacrifice of the few. At the laying of the cornerstone of the University a poem was read, whose last verse is a prayer:

Albinus A. Johnson, D. D.
March 27, 1891-June 30, 1898

Grand Master of the Universe,
Who shaped the mountains and the sea,
Move from this spot Thy primal curse,
Bequeath Thy light and liberty,
As handmaids of our future State,
To guard the portals of this gate.

1922 SUMMER SCHOOL

With a live group from the intra-session term of the 1923 Summer School as a nucleus, the summer students organized a branch of the A. S. U. W. and conducted their own activities and entertainments, resulting in the liveliest summer term ever held at the University of Wyoming.

Elmer Kissack was elected President; James Bond, Vice-President; Hazel Hill, Secretary; Mary Young, Gladys Sibley and Mrs. Elizabeth Brandt, members of the Executive Committee.

Four issues of the "Student," now "Branding Iron," were printed, and 3,000 copies of each issue sent free to high school graduates, students, teachers, state and county officers, legislators, libraries and churches. Monte Warner acted as Editor, with C. G. Bruton, Manager. Elmer Kissack has been appointed Editor for the coming summer.

A slogan of "1,000 Students In 1923" was adopted at the Summer School banquet, when over 400 students, including superintendents of the leading High Schools, were present, and many plans have been made and carried out during the winter for the realization of that slogan.

Six hundred students went by special train to Centennial and climbed the mountain to Centennial Falls, for one of the most enjoyable of the many picnics held during the summer. Scenes from this trip are shown on the opposite page, together with G. C. Bruton, upper corner, and Elmer Kissack, lower corner, while above appears a section of the group taken on the campus.

Officers for the 1923 term were elected as follows: G. C. Bruton, President; Mrs. Elizabeth Brandt, Vice-President; Agnes Price Long, Secretary; Elmer Kissack, Orville McCoy and M. A. Thrasher, members of the Executive Committee.

SVEND SCHLOSSER
General Manager, A. S. U. W.
1922-23

Svend, the general manager of the A. S. U. W., is the man who has held the purse strings for the student body during the year and is one of the most successful and capable managers who has ever graced this important position in college activities. He handled the transportation and accommodations in a very creditable manner and financially Wyoming experienced a successful year. The athletes of Wyoming have taken several long trips during the year, and thanks to our manager have always been well taken care of during these trips away from home. Our hats are off to Manager Schlosser.

Seven men donned the Yellow and Brown for the last time when they defeated B. Y. U. in the last game of the year and it is with no small amount of sorrow that we think of these men laying down their football suits, never to fight for Wyoming again on the gridiron. These men are Captain George Hegewald, Ted Madden, Pete Alers, Gregg Smith, Frank Highleyman, Les Johnstone and Don Thompson.

Although the team is hard hit by graduation this year prospects are bright for a team during the coming season that will be able to sweep a clean path through many of the teams of the Rocky Mountain Conference and make the Cowboys a team that will be respected at all times.

Next year's team will be built around Captain-elect Wittenbraker, Art King, Harold Gilbert, Clarence Smith, George Vandaveer, Laurence Desmond, Okie Blanchard, Jack Corbett, George Ducker, Harold Hobbs and Pearson from this year's veterans.

George Hegewald, (Captain), "Heg." Four years on Varsity. Heg finished his fourth year as end for Wyoming. He played stellar ball throughout his career with the Yellow and Brown and was one of the most dependable ends in the conference.

Charles Wittenbraker ("Witt"), Captain-elect, third year on Varsity. Witt was shifted from the line to backfield this year, playing in full-back position in a very creditable manner. He handled the bulk of Wyoming's punting.

Leslie Johnstone ("Les"), second year Varsity. With his 200 pounds of weight Les was a hard man to get around in the line. He played a very good tackle position during the year.

Perry Alers ("Pete"), four years on Varsity. "Pete" is a stonewall on defense and a steady man on offense, always opening a hole when called upon. He played tackle during the last season.

Don Thompson ("Ajax"), four years on Varsity. "Ajax" played a clever end and was always a source of discomfort for the opposition. A good man on defense.

Gregory Smith ("Gregg"), four years on Varsity. Wyoming's best general during the past season. In addition to being a good quarterback, Gregg was able to do his share of the ground gaining.

Edward Madden ("Ted"), three years on Varsity. A flashy man in returning punts and a clever broken field runner. Ted was one of the fastest men in the conference on end runs.

Arthur King ("Art"), first year on Varsity. "Art" played a half back position and was one of the most consistent ground gainers of the team. Played a steady defensive game.

Frank Highleyman ("Highley"), second year on Varsity. "Highley" was one of the steadiest players on the team. From center position he was in on every play and but few gains were made through him.

Clarence Smith ("Smitty"), first year on Varsity. "Smitty" has a good arm for long forward passes and hits the line hard from half-back position.

Harold Gilbert ("Gil"), first year Varsity. Gilbert played a hard charging position at tackle. His chief trick was tackling behind the enemy line before they could get under way. He is also a good man on offense.

John Corbett ("Jack"), first year on Varsity. Jack played a clever back field position. He hits the line hard and can forward pass or kick when called upon. Jack also played a good defensive game.

George Ducker ("Duck"), first year Varsity. "Duck" played in the line and at center while Highleyman was injured. He is a good hard tackler and a versatile line man.

Clair Blanchard ("Okie"), first year on Varsity. Okie played in the backfield and was a hard man for the opposition to handle. His return of 50 yards off a Mine's kick-off was the sensational run of the year.

George Vandavere ("Van"), first year on Varsity. Played at fullback and was a hard hitter and good ground gainer.

Laurence Desmond ("Des"), first year Varsity. Played a line or end position and acquitted himself well. "Des" is a good aggressive player and is under everything coming his way.

The Frosh developed a team this year that makes things look brighter for the coming season. The team was fast, both on offense and defense, and dealt trouble to every team they went up against. From this team the Varsity will draw a group of players who will battle for the Yellow and Brown until they drop.

The Frosh team had the Wyoming pep and fight and carried on against the Varsity in practice in a manner that spoke well for Coach Kelly and his battling Frosh.

The "W" Club is the honorary men's athletic club of the University of Wyoming. It is composed of the men who have been awarded the coveted "W" in any major sport. This club promotes cleaner and better athletics in Wyoming, and endeavors to get the high school stars throughout the State to attend the University.

The members of the club act in official capacities at all athletic functions during the year. This organization tends to place athletics upon the plane which they deserve and to draw the letter men together into closer bonds.

Basketball 1922-1923

ON Thompson captained the basketball squad this year from a guard position and played creditable ball during the entire season. Not only on defense was Don a great help to the team, but he was one of the high point getters for Wyoming.

Jack Corbett, captain-elect, played as an able running mate to Thompson. Corbett was a strong defensive player and added several points on Wyoming's side of the score book.

Bob Johnson was used at center and figured in all of Wyoming's passing. Bob jumps well and with this year's experience to his credit should be a valuable man for Wyoming.

Ted Banta at forward played his first year of Varsity basketball and was the fastest man on the floor. He was high point getter for Wyoming. At the end of the season he handled the free throws for Wyoming.

Les Gregg played regular in the opposite forward and was good on the short passing game. Gregg's defensive work was very good and his rangy build made him a good man for follow-in shots.

Glen Gariepy, Otto Campbell and Jim McWhinnie all played good basketball at center, forward and guard respectively. These men were all fast and dependable whenever called upon to work in a game.

Boxing 1922-1923

WYOMING and Colorado University tied for first place in boxing, but Colorado won the cup by a flip of a coin. The Cowboy mitt wielders won easily from the Aggies in the dual meet and had six of the seven entries qualify for the conference meet at Boulder. Blanchard and Dalzell won conference championship titles.

Wyoming was represented in the 115-pound class by Blanchard, the classiest scrapper of the conference. Okie won his dual bout by forfeit and at Boulder he was given the decision over his opponent. This is the second time he has held the title.

Art Munson fought in the 125-pound class. He is a fast and clever man, but was slightly out-pointed in the Boulder meet and lost the decision. Another year will see Art as a champ.

In the 135-pound weight Chappie Dalzell wore the Yellow and Brown. He won an easy decision in the dual meet and defeated his man the first night of the Boulder meet. His second match at Boulder was forfeited to him.

Eckels handled the 145-pounders for Wyoming. Eck earned a decision over his Aggie opponent, but lost a decision at the conference meet. This was his first year on the pug squad.

Captain Silburn is perhaps the best man in the conference. He won by way of the K. O. route against his Aggie opponent, but was defeated in Boulder by the same man he knocked out last year. Silburn was suffering with the "flu" at the time of the meet. He fights in the 158-pound division.

Les Gregg in the 175-pound class met Hines, the pride of Aggiedom, in the dual meet and was defeated after putting up a mighty game fight against heavy odds. Hines won the conference title in this weight.

Wittenbraker represented Wyoming in the heavyweight class. He won his dual match by forfeit and later met the Aggie man in Boulder. The Aggie won after nearly three rounds of battling.

Last year Wyoming held the championship and this year lost it on the flip of a coin. Her prospects are bright for another championship next year.

Wrestling 1922-1923

UNDER Coach Lynch and Jack Lynch Wyoming was able to develop a wrestling squad this year that by far outshadowed any previous squad. Two men won their matches against Aggies and thereby won the right to compete in the conference meet in Boulder. These men were Denton, 175 pounds and Hanna 115 pounds.

Hanna had no trouble in throwing his man in the Aggie dual meet, but lost his match in Boulder.

Fenex, 125-pounder, showed a lot of class in his weight although he was thrown in the dual meet. Fenex was brought from the boxing squad to wrestle.

Schilt wrestled in the 135-pound division and met the best man the Aggies had to send. "Louie" handled him well, but lost the match and did not qualify for the conference finals.

Backus captained the team and was in the 145-pound class. He is a fast and sensational mat man, but was thrown in the dual meet.

Ninde showed to good advantage in the 158-pound division, but was unable to gain the top position from his Aggie opponent and lost the decision.

Denton qualified in the dual meet in the 175-pound class and wrestled to a draw in the Boulder meet, losing the decision on the flip of a coin.

LaNoue held down the heavyweight class, but lost his match in the dual meet. With another year's experience he will be a valuable mat man for Wyoming.

Prospects for a winning team next year are very good.

BASEBALL, 1922

During the 1921-22 baseball season the Cowboys showed to good advantage and although they did not win the Conference championship they were strong bidders for the title and were feared through out the season. Mines won the Conference title but this was only through the Aggies being defeated by Wyoming, which gave first place to Mines.

The team was piloted by Walt Smythe from the initial sack. Smitty handled the team in good fashion and played stellar ball in his position. Not only as a fielder, but as a wielder of the willow, Walt proved himself a demon.

Don Thompson played one of the best games in the Conference as catcher for Wyoming. There are no backstops in the Conference who can outshine Don either in fielding or hitting.

Layman and Greg Smith handled the bulk of the pitching for the Cowboys. Layman is a right hander and has a mean assortment of curve balls and a good fast ball. while Smith is a left hander and a clever man in the box. Greg is never caught napping. Both of these men hit exceptionally well and when they are not pitching may be used in any other position on the team.

At third base Mike Wind played good ball. Mike is wont to be a little erratic at times but as a general rule fields the hot corner in good shape.

Bobby Thompson alternated between second and short. He has a good arm and fields clean. The good thing about Bobby is the fact that he is always talking it up in the infield and adding pepper to the team.

Hanna played as regular outfielder and was Wyoming's leadoff man. Shorty is good on fly balls and fast on running bases. Devine and Madden are two fast outfielders, and both may be depended upon for safe hits in a pinch.

BASEBALL, 1923

The Cowboy baseball team is fast rounding into shape and at this time the team is in Colorado invading the other Conference colleges. On the trip they will play Greeley, Colorado College, Colorado U., and Aggies. The lineup includes: D. Thompson, catcher; Layman, Spears, Smith and Deason, pitchers; Bellamy, first; R. Thompson, second; Powell, short; Wind, third; Cotton, Madden and Hanna in the outfield. Due to the late season and the extreme cold weather, Wyoming has not had a chance to work enough out of doors, and consequently is weak both in fielding and batting. It is very difficult to predict a successful season for Wyoming in baseball as the jinx seems to have settled in the Cowboy camp for the whole year, and there seems to be no way of getting rid of it.

INTRA-MURAL BASEBALL, 1921-1922

The team representing Sigma Alpha Epsilon tucked away the Intra-Mural Baseball Championship for 1921-1922. The series was run on a one game elimination plan and the winning team played three games to win the championship. In the first game the Greek letter men took the Prep team into camp. The next game they defeated the Faculty. After this game S. A. E. and Sigma Nu were the only teams left and they played for the championship, S. A. E. winning by a 7-2 score. Sheldon, pitcher premier for S. A. E., struck out 19 men in the last game.

A. T. O. INTRA-MURAL BASKETBALL CHAMPIONS

After the smoke of terrific battle had somewhat cleared from the scene of the Intra-Mural Basketball contests, A. T. O. stood as the champs. The first game was with the S. A. E.s and ended with Alpha Tau holding 16 points to the Sig Alphas 5. The next and final contest saw the boys of the Gold and Blue defeat Kappa Sigma 16 to 6. Both games were hard fought and were well earned.

The Chapter team was not a flashy one, but was steady and consistent in the major departments. On the defense they were almost impregnable, only two field goals being scored against them. The other points earned by their opponents were gained on free throws. On the offense they were also steady and consistent and were characterized by good floor work and an accurate eye for the basket.

INTRA-MURAL TRACK CHAMPIONS, 1923

The Kappa Sigma Track Team won the annual spring Intra-Mural Track and Field Meet for 1923, defeating the nearest entry, the A. T. O's, 42 to 37. Schoonmaker the captain of the Kappa Sigs, won first in the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds flat, and also took first in the 220. First were taken by Greth, who made 10 points in the Shot and Discus, and by LaNoue who won first in the 880. Straley finished second in the Mile and Adams second in the Two-mile. Powell took second in the Pole Vault and High Jump. Five third places were taken by other members of the team. This victory entitled the Fraternity to the Track Championship banner given by the University.

The Women's Athletic Association

BY MARJORIE NICE

The Wyoming Women's Athletic Association was organized February 6, 1923, for the purpose of promoting health and sportsmanship among the women of the University.

The Point system is used in selection of members, and any girl in the University who has won 100 points in any recognized athletic sport is eligible. The present membership numbers 29 girls. Those who have won 300 points are entitled to a W pin; those who have won 750 points receive small W emblems; and those who have won 1,000 points are entitled to W sweaters, which are given by the A. S. U. W. The girls eligible for sweaters this year are Jane Beck, Leona Gage, Alice Hardie, Lucy Holliday, and Agnes Stendahl.

The recognized sports of this association are hockey, basketball, tennis, track, horse-back riding, interpretative dancing, and hiking. Each of these activities is taken care of by a "head of sport."

The success of this organization has been due in large measure to the splendid efforts of Miss Oakes, Jane Beck, and Agnes Stendahl, who have given the Association a good start toward prominence on the campus.

The officers are as follows:

Gertrude McKay.....	President
Nancy Jones.....	Vice President
Helen McWhinnie.....	Treasurer
Kathryn Hodges.....	Secretary

The lineups for the teams were as follows:

Seniors: Stendahl (captain), Beck, Gage, Holliday, Hardie, Tanner, Dixon, Sibley.

Juniors: Schofield (captain), McKay, Spielman, Johnson, Doubleday.

Sophomores: Avent (captain), Renswold, Jones, Hisey, Lynch, Murphy, Buchanan.

The Branding Iron

 Olga Moore.....Associate Editor
 Glen Burton.....Business Manager

The Branding Iron, formerly called The Wyoming Student, is the official newspaper of the Associated Students of the University of Wyoming. Under the name of The Wyoming Student it was begun in 1898, with Charles L. Rigdon as editor. In its first few years it had the form of a literary magazine, rather than that of a newspaper, although some current world and college events were chronicled in its pages. Its popularity and importance grew until in 1913, under the editorship of Miss Agnes Wright, it became a weekly newspaper. Since then it has grown in size and circulation until its mailing list includes the names of alumni and others in every county in Wyoming, and a few in other states, as well as England. This year, in response to a general demand for something more representative and appropriate to the traditions and customs of Wyoming, the name was officially changed to The Branding Iron, under the editorship of G. Edward Pendray.

The paper has had two editors this year. Monte Warner, who was elected at the regular A. S. U. W. elections last spring, after doing excellent work as editor resigned because of the pressure of other duties, and G. Edward Pendray was chosen to take his place at a special election in December.

"W" BOOK

Charles Fred Parks.....Editor

The fourth annual University handbook or Freshman bible, published by the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., and known as the "W" Book was especially complete and satisfactory this year. It contained all the usual interesting and valuable information about the University, its organizations, activities, traditions, songs, and yells, in addition to much valuable advice to Freshmen. The book was published with an attractive leather cover for the first time, and as it contained a complete calendar of the school year, class schedules, etc., it proved a very useful memorandum. This year's volume was appropriately dedicated to Coach John Corbett.

The University Directory

Herbert Woodman.....Editor

The University Directory is published each year by the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., and is sold to the students and faculty at cost. This year's volume, Volume III, proved to be very complete and comprehensive. It contains a complete alphabetical directory of all students and faculty and classified lists of fraternities, organization officers, and home residence of students. There was indeed some interesting information revealed as to the growth of the University, the places from which the students come, and the variety of organizations to be found on the campus.

It must be confessed that the "Y" has this year been comparatively inactive. Our General Secretary, Stan Pier, was called to a larger field of service with the Student Volunteer Movement early in the year and the absence of a General Secretary has been keenly felt by the organization.

However, some of the traditional "Y" activities have been bravely carried on. Early in the fall the familiar "W" Book appeared, being by far the best we have had. We also claim a measure of success for the Stag-do and our share in the General Jam, both of which were held at the beginning of the year. Slow but sure, the University directory appeared late in the winter term, no little credit being due those who labored so long and faithfully in its behalf.

If we may be permitted to say it, we have quite a hopeful prospect for the coming year, as the organization of the "Y" is being completely rearranged and no effort is being spared to secure a capable general secretary.

Although the Young Women's Christian Association has not yet reached the place toward which it is aiming, it has been progressing and has done some splendid work this year.

The Big Sister Movement was a great success and almost every girl on the campus was reached by it.

The Freshman Frolic achieved its purpose of introducing the new girls to the activities and general life of the University.

The World Fellowship Committee, especially, has done commendable work in conducting the Universal Week of Prayer, and the "Wyoming-in-India" and European Student Relief Campaigns.

A new committee, Conferences and Conventions, has been added to our list of Cabinet Committees, and is doing very good service in arousing interest in conference work. Ten delegates from Wyoming attended the Student Volunteer Conference at Golden through the efforts of this committee.

There has been a closer co-ordination of work of Cabinet and Advisory Board during the year, a stronger relationship between Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., and altogether the year has been most successful.

DEBATING

RESOLVED: That all inter-allied war debts should be cancelled.

AFFIRMATIVE: Sholie Richards, Erma Stevens, Marian Field, Ruth Hemphill.

NEGATIVE: Alice Hardie, Pauline Bunting, Hazel Bowman, Maurine Hollo.

On Thursday, February twenty-second, Wyoming won the first debate of the season when Erma Stevens, Sholie Richards and Ruth Hemphill received a 2-1 decision of the judges over a team of men from Nebraska State Normal School. The Wyoming girls defended the affirmative side of the question.

On the following evening, our negative team, composed of Alice Hardie, Pauline Bunting and Maurine Hollo, convinced Attorney Morrison Shaforth of Denver that the inter-allied debts should not be cancelled. The opposite side of the question was defended by a second team of men from Kearney. This debate was held at Laramie.

Alice Hardie, Hazel Bowman and Maurine Hollo composed the team which met Colorado Teachers' College on Thursday, March 1st, at Greeley, Colorado. Wyoming upheld the negative side of the question and received the unanimous vote of the three judges.

On the evening of Friday, March second, Wyoming women added two more scalps to our list. Our negative team made up of Alice Hardie, Pauline Bunting and Maurine Hollo received a 2-1 decision in a debate against the University of Denver, at Denver. While these girls were winning this debate in Colorado, the affirmative team at Laramie was debating a team from the Colorado Agricultural College. Wyoming was represented by Sholie Richards, Marian Field and Ruth Hemphill. The decision was 3-0.

The last debate on this particular question was held at Fort Collins on the Saturday following the above debate. Alice Hardie, Hazel Bowman and Maurine Hollo composed this team which rounded out by a 2-1 decision the record of the girls' teams for the season.

RESOLVED; That the United States should adopt the cabinet-parliamentary system of government.

AFFIRMATIVE: Elmer Kissack, George Guy, Wilmer Stevens.

NEGATIVE: George Ross, Wesley Kerper, Ralph Conwell.

The first debate on this question was held at Laramie, March third, when Elmer Kissack and Wilmer Stevens debated a team from Montana State College. The Wyoming men defended the affirmative side of the question. The decision was 3-0 in favor of Wyoming.

On March 8th, Elmer Kissack, George Guy and Wilmer Stevens debated Colorado College at Colorado Springs, again defending the affirmative side of the question. The debate coach of the Colorado Springs High School gave his decision to Wyoming.

On the following evening our negative team composed of George Ross, Wesley Kerper and Ralph Conwell debated a team representing Denver University. The debate was held at Laramie, and the judge, Attorney Avery Haggard, gave his decision to Wyoming on superior delivery.

The fourth and final debate on this question was held at Laramie, April 6th when our negative team met Pomona, California. Wyoming was represented by Ralph Conwell and Wilmer Stevens. The judge was Dr. Bowers of Colorado Teachers' College. After one of the closest and hottest contested debates of the season, the judge decided in favor of Wyoming, and Dr. Crane presented the winners with the "bacon."

RESOLVED: That organized labor should enter politics as a separate political party.

AFFIRMATIVE: James O'Brien, Herbert Woodman.

NEGATIVE: Homer Mann, William B. Featherstone.

Homer Mann and William Featherstone opened the debating season for the men on February twenty-sixth, when they met the University of Colorado, at Laramie. Superintendent C. A. Anderson, a former debater from Nebraska, gave the decision to the yellow and brown.

The same evening, our negative team composed of James O'Brien and Herbert Woodman received a 2-1 decision at Salt Lake City, meeting the University of Utah.

On Friday, April thirteenth, in Room thirteen of the Main Hall (Auditorium), Wyoming won her last and thirteenth debate of the season. James O'Brien and Herbert Woodman defended the affirmative side of the question for Wyoming. The judge was B. M. Cherrington, district Y. M. C. A. secretary and a former debater from Nebraska. The opposing team represented the University of Nevada.

Wyoming debaters have this year established a record in intercollegiate debating. The season closed with thirteen victories in thirteen debates. Considering that last year was the first debate that Wyoming had won in several years, this record seems unbelievable. Thirteen seems to have been lucky for the Cowboys, for the thirteenth debate was held on the thirteenth of April in room thirteen of University Hall. Superstitious people may think that this has something to do with Wyoming's success.

Many of the opposing schools had established records as debaters but all proved vain for Wyoming was invincible. Utah, Nebraska, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, and California colleges met defeat when they met the teams of the Brown and Yellow. Seven of the thirteen victories were won by the men and the remaining six by the women, two of which were won from men's teams.

A challenge was sent to Bates College which claims to be the holder of the American College Debating Championship the challenge though not accepted, shows Wyoming's pride in her debating teams.

Wyoming feels proud of her 1923 debate record. It is indeed an unusual record, when we consider that four of the debaters—Marian Field, Hazel Bowman, Wesley Kerper and George Guy are Freshmen. Although we lose some of our best debaters through graduation, we feel that there will be a nucleus upon which may be built a second champion debating record next year. Those who graduate this year are Ruth Hemphill, Maurine Hollo, Alice Hardie, Wilmer Stevens and William Featherstone.

The Wyoming Playmakers is an organization of the students of the University of Wyoming interested in a better dramatic literature. This organization has for its purpose the writing and producing of plays interpretative of the life and traditions of the people of Wyoming. A number of these native folk-plays have been written in the University course in Dramatic Composition, English 31, which forms the nucleus of the Playmaker movement here. Three of these plays were selected for the initial Playmaker production on April 24th.

The Playmakers hope, in the early future, to have a stage on the campus where they can construct their own stage equipment, design and paint their own scenery, and produce their own plays. With this will come the working out of their desire to come into contact with every community within the State, taking their folk-plays to the people and interesting them in the traditions and life of their own State. The Playmaker work is distinctively a movement for the people and of the people.

Membership in the Playmakers is open to any student and to any person in the community participating in any way in the productions and work.

Lyceum Arts Entertainers

The Lyceum Arts Entertainers was organized as a company, by the members of the Expression Class, introduced in the University of Wyoming this year under the direction of H. H. Higgins. Elmer R. Kissack was elected manager and Marian Field, assistant manager.

Membership in the company is limited to election from members of the Expression Class and the school of music each year, who show exceptional ability and interest in lyceum work, in tryouts conducted each spring in March.

The company has supplemented the work of the Expression Class this year by giving full evening entertainments in the city and in nearby communities, and has furnished readers for social programs of various clubs, churches, fraternal and civic organizations of the city, giving, in all, over two hundred readings outside of school during the year.

THE RHODES SCHOLARSHIP TO OXFORD UNIVERSITY, ENGLAND

In the Rhodes Scholarship the University of Wyoming offers the young men of Wyoming the most renowned and valuable single educational opportunity that can be had in the world. For fascinating reading we refer you to the life story of the big-hearted English diamond king, Cecil Rhodes, who founded the scholarship, and the many discussions concerning the benefits of that scholarship to an American.

All regular unmarried men students of the University of Wyoming under twenty-five, are eligible to appointment. Appointments are based upon the tripple consideration of scholarship, athletic prowess, and general qualities of leadership. To derive any calculable benefit from academic study at Oxford, however, a candidate must have studied two foreign languages, one of which must have been Latin or Greek. Also the American will probably get the most out of Oxford who intends to study the major sciences, mathematics, philosophy, foreign languages, theology, history, English or law. The scholarship amounts to approximately $1660 per year, paid in quarterly installments, and is good for three years. No regulations or restrictions are made as to the manner in which this money is spent. Vacations at Oxford constitute six months of the year, during which time the Rhodes scholar is expected to tour England and Europe. Thus the scholarship offers a Wyomingite an intimacy with the romatic life and tradition of England's grandest university, together with a first hand acquaintance with the Old World, which he will probably never get in any other manner. It is an important one of the many opportunities that Wyoming's university offers Wyoming students.

PHI KAPPA PHI

Phi Kappa Phi is a national honor society which was installed in the University of Wyoming in 1922. It has the attractive feature of not confining its membership to a particular course of study like Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi, and, therefore, has found a cordial welcome, especially among state colleges and universities.

The local chapter was installed by Dr. Edwin E. Sparks, former president of Pennsylvania State College, March 21, 1922.

This organization had a humble beginning in 1897 when a dozen students organized at the University of Maine, a local society in recognition of honor work. The society appeals to all our strongest institutions, since any student who graduates in collegiate institutions of proper standards is entitled to be recognized as an honor student if his scholastic record permits. The object of Phi Kappa Phi is to emphasize scholarship, to stimulate mental competitions, and to uphold the purpose and dignity of the higher institutions of learning.

Modern languages seem very remote from Wyoming, a State located as it is in the heart of the United States. It is far from the coast, surrounded entirely by customs, people and language entirely American. It is almost impossible to create in the University of Wyoming a feeling and understanding for foreign language and custom, a local color atmosphere for the study of either modern or classical tongues.

It was for the purpose of creating an interest in these things and for promoting high standards of scholarship in this and all other branches of scholastic activity that Gamma Epsilon was organized in January, 1923, as a local honorary society for language students. It is now the purpose of the society to petition Sigma Kappa Phi, the national honorary fraternity for language majors, and if possible establish on our campus another active factor to stimulate interest in and understanding for other languages and peoples and, what is more important, to stimulate scholastic achievement and to maintain on our campus the highest ideals of scholarship.

The Executive Committee of the Associated Students of the University of Wyoming have conscientiously worked this year to steer "the ship of state" in calm waters.

Although they had to assume a financial burden, which has accumulated for several years, they have materially decreased it through the close co-operation of the committees with faculty advisor, Dr. S. H. Knight, and student manager, Svend Schlosser. The requisition plan has been successfully carried out.

The Committee found that the Constitution had become entirely inadequate to efficiently carry on the work of the student body and so with the advice of President Crane and the work of a diligent committee a new Constitution has been framed which is hoped will strengthen the entire A. S. U. W. organization.

The A. S. U. W. has attempted to standardize athletic awards. Athletics for both men and women have been recognized and encouraged by the committee because they realize that athletics for both men and women are a vital part of every progressive University. The A. S. U. W. took its part in the activities of High School Week and Home Coming Week.

Two new means of raising money, as well as furnishing entertainment, have been established this year. The "A. S. U. W. Winter Carnival" and "The Spring Jubilee."

The outgoing A. S. U. W. Executive Committee takes this opportunity of thanking all those who have worked so faithfully in trying to strengthen our organization and to build a greater University.

LEGISLATIVE BOARD OF WOMEN'S LEAGUE

The women students of the University of Wyoming have been organized a comparatively short time, but a great deal has been accomplished during that time. This is the third year for Women's League and already it is filling a much needed place on the campus, through the earnest endeavor of the Legislative Board. This year the organizations represented in the League have taken very active part in furthering its work and a deep interest in promoting the growth of the organization on the campus.

One of the larger projects which the League has undertaken is women's self-government. A real need has been felt for a system of this type, which is in operation on many other campuses. Measures are being taken to establish such a system before the college year is over so that it may be ready for operation next year.

Several very successful social events have been held, numbering among them the annual Co-ed Ball, held in the fall, and the Kittenish Kaper, which it is hoped will become an annual function.

The League was unusually fortunate this year in being able to have two delegates at the Third Annual Intercollegiate Conference of Associated Women Students held at the University of Utah on November 8, 9 and 10. It has proved a great inspiration to have had such a contact with the women's organizations of other colleges.

CERCLE FRANCAIS

Le Cercle Francais was organized in January, 1923, by the advanced French students. The officers as then elected are:

President.....	Edward Daly
Vice President.....	Josephine Irby
Recording Secretary.....	Crete Wood
Corresponding Secretary.....	Naomi Burdick
Treasurer.....	George Seyfarth

The club was organized for the combined purposes of furnishing entertainment, stimulating interest in the French language and customs and giving the students an opportunity to talk French. Meetings have been held once every month at which a program usually consisting of short plays and musical numbers was given by the members. All conversation is carried on in French, thus giving the students a fluency in speaking that language that it would be impossible to gain in the class room.

The Home Economics Club was organized in 1920 for the purpose of increasing the interest in Home Economics work. Membership is taken from those registered in the department. The aim is to acquaint students with outside movements in the field which is included in this course and to learn of the opportunities for women trained in Home Economics. Already some Wyoming homes and schools have been benefitted by Home Economic trained women and we hope the time is not far distant when the influence of women trained in this field will be felt to a much larger extent in Wyoming by an increasing number of trained home workers, teachers, dietitians and other workers that call for this training.

AG CLUB

Much enthusiasm has been shown in the Ag Club this year. At the bi-monthly meetings the club has been fortunate enough to secure many worth while speakers and always has a complete change of program. These programs are organized so as to bring before the students practical problems, and problems from practical experiences, which makes the students more competent to meet the problems of every-day life.

The Potter Law Club is an organization of all law students and faculty and is named in honor of Chief Justice Potter. It was organized last year by Prof. Thurman Arnold and proved to be one of the live organizations on the campus. Meetings are held at which legal papers are read and moot cases are argued. The meetings also serve as mixers. A formal dance was held at the Connor early in the year. Last year a formal banquet was held, which was about the most successful affair of its kind ever staged on the campus. The Governor, all the members of the Supreme Court, the President and Board of Trustees, and many other notables attended. The membership exceedingly regrets that the banquet was not repeated this year as had been planned. It will very probably be revived next year and continued as an annual event.

What has proven to be one of the most successful organizations on the campus is the Gun and Pen Club, in which membership is limited to students who were injured in the late war, and are receiving vocational training under the federal government. There are about seventy-five of these men in the University and until the effecting of an organization, for the most part they took little interest in college activities. Early in the school year Monte Warner started the movement and after several efforts and much difficulty got enough men together to organize. The new organization, slow in starting, proved to be a real one once it got up steam. Two meetings are held each month, one for business, and the other a social meeting. The club has functioned in many ways: it has served to get the men acquainted; a housing committee assists new vocational students in getting established; the Gun and Pen Auxiliary has served to provide social life for the wives of the members. The organization has served to make the members realize that they are a part of the University in every way, and since the organization the members have demonstrated their loyalty to the institution in many ways, as helping and rooting at football games and other functions. A baseball team competed in the Intra-Murals. A picnic will be held early in June. One of the more lasting benefits of the organization is the work of the employment committee, which has as its duty the assistance in finding employment for members on the completion of their courses.

YOUNG REPUBLICANS' CLUB

President.....Marion Quick
 Vice President.....George Hegewald
 Secretary.....Otto Campbell
 Treasurer.....Sam Halley

The Young Republicans' Club is for the purpose of informing its members on affairs of the day and to give them experience in extemporaneous speaking and parliamentary procedure. This was the organization's first year on the campus and its meetings have been irregular; however, it is planned that beginning with the opening of school in the fall, regular weekly meetings will be held. It is the only organization on the campus which has among its purposes, instruction in rules of order, which is so essential to college men and women who are so frequently called upon to preside. Although membership is limited to those of Republican leanings the discussions are liberal and the members do not hesitate to find fault with the party when they see fit. The club believes, however, that the way to accomplish needed political reforms is not to tear down existing organizations, but rather to advocate progressive policies from within.

"P & R" COMPLETING BIG REFINERY IN WYOMING

Producers and Refiners Corporation, now the foremost independent producer of crude petroleum in the Rocky Mountain Field, are completing in Southern Wyoming a new 10,000 barrel refinery which will be one of the world's largest, finest, and most modern refining plants and will have the advantage of low shipping rates into all consuming markets of the Middle West.

The site of the new plant comprises 2,960 acres on the Union Pacific main line between Rawlins and Ft. Steele. The small town at this point has been rechristened "Parco" after the trade-name under which "P & R" products are marketed.

Equipment includes storage for one million barrels of crude, stills of sufficient size to produce more than the rated capacity, a large cracking plant, a lubricating oil plant, and a complete wax plant.

"P & R" owns and operates two refineries in Oklahoma, where large production properties are also owned, large gasoline absorption plants in Wyoming and Oklahoma, and approximately 600 miles of oil and gas pipe lines connecting its production with these plants. A fleet of nearly a thousand tank cars transports PARCO products to the country's carlot oil markets, in the three most important of which large sales offices are maintained.

They are superior to any on the market, possess individuality and cost no more than the ordinary style. Right now is the time to work up Class spirit in this matter. RAWLINS, WYOMING

May
Fifteenth,
1923-----

Associated Students of the University,
Laramie, Wyoming,

Dear Students:

We are in receipt of your letter concerning convicts Nos 3, 4, 5, 10, 14, 16, 24, 25, 28, and 34. On account of the number of lurid details, we regret that only a few outstanding cases can be referred to in detail here.

Convicts Nos 4 & 25 have both served long and faithfully for not paying their laundry bills of a year ago. Convict No. 3 was caught stealing silverware out of the Connor Hotel for the Delta Mu Alpha house. He was released after several years of breaking stones for the roads, under promise of never being naughty again. So far as we have been able to find out, he has kept his promise.

Convict No. 14 was arrested for playing marbles for keeps on the sidewalk in front of the Boomerang office, and charging the boss overtime for it. He proved very intractable in captivity, but upon being relegated to the dungeon for several years, was sufficiently tamed to be made a trusty. Last year his inordinately wild nature again asserted itself when he eloped with the warden's daughter, absolutely without provocation. He is still a fugitive from justice.

Convict No. 28 served for several years as the prison mascot. His story is an especially sad one, and it has been found out only lately that he was held for a crime inadvertently committed. In his youth he was employed to crawl down rabbit holes and ferret out rabbits for the gratification of hunters. One time, becoming fast in the hole, he endeavored to extricate himself by pulling on the chain by which his employer held him. This act was construed as an attempted theft of the chain, and he was sent to us for correction.

The State Penitentiary heartily congratulates you for having these gentlemen in your organization, and wishes to assure you that what is your loss is our gain. We recommend any of them for any of your A.S.U.W. offices and feel that they can fill them satisfactorily, having had, as you know, a thorough training in theoretical and applied criminality

SHERIDAN, THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

ELEVATION 3737

Sheridan, Wyoming, is beautifully located at the eastern base of the Big Horn Mountains, at a point where the sparkling waters of the Big and Little Goose Creeks join to flow northward into the Tongue River. It is a City of magnificent Public Buildings, Beautiful Homes, nine magnificent Church Edifices, representing as many denominations, one High School Building, six beautiful Grade School Buildings with a school faculty second to none in the State. Sheridan High School is on the accredited list. Graduates are eligible to enter any college in the United States.

RESIDENCE OF SENATOR JOHN B. KENDRICK

The city is modern in every respect. More so, possibly, than any other city in the whole Rocky Mountain area. A few of the items that make Sheridan modern are: 22,300 square yards of street paving, 38 miles of cement walks and curbs, 15 miles of city and interurban street railway, a modern gravity water supply system of 57 miles of mains, a storage capacity of two and a half million gallons, a City Park covering 75 acres with lawns, trees, flowers, lakes, drives, statuary, a zoo containing magnificent specimens of western animals, including buffalo, elk, deer, bear, etc. Sheridan prides itself on having the finest tourist camp building equipped with all modern conveniences of any city in the northwest. Over 20,000 people registered at the camp grounds last year.

All roads leading into the city are improved. A ten mile stretch of concrete slab connects the city with the village of Big Horn on the southwest. Ninety-five miles of gravel and shale surfaced highways, 785 miles of the best graded roads in the State. All in Sheridan County and leading toward Sheridan. Four Highways, the most important being the Custer Battlefield Hiway, Sheridan-Buffalo-Casper Highway, Sheridan-Forsythe-Miles City, and the Sheridan-Lovell-Cody Hiway. The latter being under construction will be completed across the beautiful Big Horn Mountain Range this year.

The spirit of Sheridan is ever advancing. Sheridan has a modern Light and Power Plant, second to none in the State. Also the largest and most modern Flour Mill, the largest Sugar Factory, the largest Iron Works and Foundry, the largest Brick and Tile Plant and the largest Gas Plant.

Fort McKenzie, adjoining the city, a survival of Indian days and one of the most beautiful military reservations in the west, has recently become the United States Veterans Hospital 86 for the care and treatment of injured veterans. The personnel, physicians, surgeons, expert nurses number 130. At present there are 250 patients.

SHERIDAN HIGH SCHOOL

Sheridan has a large, commodious County Hospital fully equipped with all the latest appliances.

Here are located the famous Eaton Dude Ranches, Summer Resorts and Summer Homes, where the weary Easterner hikes westward to while away the heated term and commune with nature.

Here is the playground designed by nature and set in order by man for the entertainment and recreation of the people. To the west and south are the beautiful Big Horn Mountains from the eternal snows of whose summits more than a dozen sparkling, beautiful streams race down through picturesque canyons, through verdant foothills to the beautiful valleys to the east and north, humming throughout their length with the activities of the great agricultural and livestock and mining industries. In the Big Horn Mountains are nestled many beautiful lakes at an elevation of six to eight thousand feet, 1200 miles of trout streams, alive with the gamest of trout which makes it truly the Fisherman's Paradise.

LOVE

When a man first loves his little lady love,
He fumbles 'round her jaw all the while;
Well, he loves her father, mother, and her sister and her brother,
Till the old man comes to the door,
Takes a pistol from his pocket,
And swears he's going to cock it
And blow out his giddy, giddy brains.

But Daughter says he mustn't,
So, of course, he doesn't,
And the loving goes on just the same.
Well, the Gamma Zetas love it,
The K. D.'s aren't above it,
The Tri-Delts have a finger in the pie;
The Pi Phis are so haughty
That they say it's very naughty,
But you bet your boots they do it on the sly.

Irrigated Farm Lands
AND
Homestead Lands and Water Rights Under "Carey Act"

LOCATION:

Lands are in The Wheatland Colony in Platte County, Wyoming.

AGRICULTURE:

Lands are irrigated from one of the most complete irrigation systems in the country. All the grains, grasses, clovers and other crops, including sugar beets, potatoes, etc., are successfully grown. The altitude is about 4,700 feet.

RAILROADS, MARKETS AND INDUSTRIES:

The Colorado & Southern Railroad traverses the Colony. Products are readily disposed of to: a flour mill, two alfalfa meal mills, a creamery and two elevators; which pay Omaha and Denver prices.

Many land purchasers have made money by combining with their farming: stock raising, sheep and cattle feeding, hog raising, dairy business and poultry business.

"WHEN WE WAS LITTLE KIDS"

"My heart is with the ocean," cried the poet rapturously.

"You've gone me one better," said his sea-sick friend as he took a firmer grip on the rail.

DELTA MU ALPHA—Shape is identical with the shape of a weenie used in founding the new frat. It is symbolic with their dogged intentions. 1. The oil can, shoe and corn cob speak for themselves. 2. The moon or crescent is their guiding star. The canoe is the sign that they paddle their own. The eye is for the big 1 and little—sense. The wire is for the baracade between them and dear national, up the road.

PI BETA PHI—Shape: Like a diamond; something they all wish they had. 1. The razor is for their sharpness of wit. 2. By the sink they cleanse themselves. 3. DeLux is for the style they have got? 4. The mop and scrub-brush is the hope of a clean heart. 5. Their line is good—to hang clothes upon.

A. T. O.—Shape: Judge for yourself. 1. The bottle as always is just out of their reach, but there are a few ladders in town. 2. They are a sporty bunch. Look at the clothes if you don't believe me. And for looks they take all the silverware.

SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON—Shape: That of a wine glass. Quadrant 1. "Three kegs a beer for the frat of us." Quadrant 2. Symbolic of their mascot the worm. Quadrant 3. They uphold the great study of the stars. Quadrant 4. The call of their forefathers is manifested in the notes of the frat.

KAPPA DELTA—Shape: Like a shield. Quadrant 1. Car: This is representative of the money they wish they had. Also their ability as rushers. The hairpins, for they are knit together (they are nit). L' Eau clo: They are a smell bunch of girls. Quadrant 2. The earrot used to beautify the complexion.

DELTA DELTA DELTA—Shape: It is a spear head. Quadrant 1. Look close and decide for yourself. Quadrant 2. Their mother Eve introduced the first loose-leaf system. Quadrant 3. The dog for the dog they try to put on. Quadrant 4. This is symbolic of their tongues.

GAMMA ZETA—Shape: I'm not sure, are you? 1. The eye of K. K. G. is upon them. The almighty eye— 2. They are on the outside in robes of silver. Will they ever reach the top of the golden stairs?

SIGMA NU—Shape: Good shape. 1. Must I explain each hobby they have as they make grades? Yes, it is something to crow about. 2. They are reaching the goal of perfection.

KAPPA SIGMA—Shape: Artistic. 1. Bill the Almighty of the frat. Notice he looks up not down. 2. Below is a cake and desk. Ask A. Willard Brokaw, he'll be glad to explain. 3. The row of cups are for black coffee. 4. The lower symbol explains the end to which this frat is working.

THE MIDDLEMAN'S PROFIT IS YOURS

An ordinary pair of socks leaves the factory bearing the modest price of 18 cents. But before they are pulled on over the feet for which they were destined they take on the aristocratic price of 75 cents.

The profit of the "Middleman," that individual who is now recognized as an institution, is largely responsible for the added cost of socks and most everything else as it passes thru his hands to the people.

Public utility service is about the only thing from which the middleman exacts no toll. This service, whether it is a street car ride, gas, energy for light or power, or telephonic communication, is delivered direct to the user from the company which provides it.

The public utility company customer, who, as a rule, pays out but 4 per cent of his income for service, thus receives the middleman's profit—in the form of reasonable rates.

Oil Well Near Moorcroft

City of Moorcroft Wyoming

Moorcroft, situated in the extreme southwest corner of Crook County, on the C., B. & Q. R. R., is a growing town of about 500 population. It has an excellent soft water supply and sewerage system. The educational facilities are excellent, it has a full four year high school course with normal training, has full equipment and a splendid corps of instructors. The school district is well financed, as it is one of the few districts in the county which has always recognized the importance of providing adequate resources by voting the levy limit, consequently it has been able to pay good salaries, which has enabled it to secure the best talent available.

Moorcroft is a supply point for a wide territory, both north and south; it has well stocked general stores and good hotel accommodations, there being four excellent hotels.

GREEN RIVER GREAT RAILROADS GOOD OADS AND RESOURCES

Green River, Wyoming, the city with a real present and an unlimited future.

Situated in a beautiful green valley, on the Lincoln Highway, on the famous Green River, the Seeds-ke-de-gee of old, and on the greatest national line of transportation, the Union Pacific, it attracts and will continue to attract even in greater numbers, people from all over the nation.

The man looking to build a home will find an unlimited water supply, plentiful and pure; he will find electric power at reasonable rates; he will find educational institutions more than filling the requirements of the present day; he will find ample opportunities for religious interest, and he will find opportunities unsurpassed for social recreation.

The man with capital to invest will find unlimited opportunities for development in the vast oil shale beds considered to be the largest and richest in the United States; he will find unlimited opportunities in the development of hydro-electric power on the Green River, considered unsurpassed for water power; he will find ample opportunities for irrigation projects, the development of land along Green River being just in its infancy.

Green River's proximity to the greatest gas well and one of the greatest coal deposits in the United States insures adequate fuel for any and all industrial enterprises. Located on the Union Pacific and Lincoln Highway, it insures immediate transportation facilities and a ready market; it has adequate available ground and space for buildings; its banks are sound and reliable, and its business men are awake and energetic.

In other words, to sum it all, Green River is admirably located and offers extraordinary inducement to any and all industries looking for business locations, and it offers better homes for better people who are looking for a better place in which to live.
